Tbh used to prefer old style, now leaning toward new style.

I'd probably have to say the new style.

I prefer the new one more than old one , feels better and will made

Definitely old-school because I like the drawings better and they're more successful as a game structure.

Honestly, new style anime.

The clean animation, smoother fights, better lighting, and overall production quality just hit different. Stuff from the last few years feels way more dynamic.

But I'll admit there's something special about the old style that rough, gritty hand-drawn look has a vibe modern anime can't fully recreate.

So yeah, I lean new... but I still respect the classics.

Mostly new style, there are some old animes that look nice but they can probs be counted with one hand.

Definitely old school. There are good ones in both but the lazy 3d rendering in today's age seems to be taking over. It's appalling in my opinion. Anime has always been a very deep art from the emotional depth to the hours they spent drawing, animating and even voice acting.

i prefer one piece

New style anime grabs my attention with stunning visuals.

I still wish some had the soul of older shows.

I do love hand drawn animation but seeing some of the latest of JK and Demon slayer I don't mind both Honestly, I'm more into old anime. There's just something about the art and vibes that hits different. New stuff looks cool and all, but old shows have that charm, you know?
