That's nice, you care about cars in general, or?

Since you purchased a limited-edition model.

The house I bought in 2005. In US dollars I only have $20,000 left to pay on it. Luckily I don't have to pay much per week right now.

I didn't buy a car.

I didn't buy a watch.

I bought a crypto mining rig — basically a very expensive space heater that occasionally whispers "maybe profit" LOL

DmitriBlowvReborn - December 29, 2025, 6:41 pm

Bankruptcy for most people usually, lol. I should've spoken properly though, it really isn't a lein or anything but has the potential to turn into one if this becomes worse. However, they are trying to make me pay for certain damages that were supposed to be covered under liability insurance so it's a total mess. For personal reasons, I can't dive into the whole thing but:

It's a condo/investment property that got f*cked up after a natural disaster and many people are attempting to sue the contracting company tasked with repair who slacked for years and stole supplies from the HOA. For a few years now, other people in the neighborhood have also been left without a home and forced to rent or be homeless since the disaster happened literally almost 2 years ago. I was reading over their accounting paperwork they finally sent over to residents for the past 3-4 years as well and comparing costs and there is a lot of shady stuff that I noticed but I really do not want to say too much since legal counsel has been retained by people part of the complex bc of this whole thing.

Basically everyone is being forced to pay for repairs out of a pool of all residents (even though some buildings were not damaged to the extent as others; they must pay the same amount as part of the deductible) that contractors further made repair costs higher by accidentally damaging my unit and others. It was supposed to be wrapped up a year ago but the contracting company and lawyers with the HOA are dragging so much of this out imho and now there are lawsuits all over the place from residents with good reason because we've effectively been unable to live on our property again for literally over 20 months.

Pop Shells - December 30, 2025, 5:50 pm

JoshAllen - December 30, 2025, 6:49 pm

There's a lot more damage caused by bad weather now than I've ever seen in my lifetime before. It started in 2021 where I live. Never had these things happen before. Damage to my house twice. Never had weather damage to any house I've lived in before 2021. We had crazy flooding which didn't affect my house or property because it's elevated but the storms and cyclone did damage one room.
