

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Do you still talk to your childhood friends?

Mr. Node.js - October 4, 2025, 11:58 pm

Lately I've been scrolling through my old chat lists and realizing how many people I used to talk to every single day are now just... gone.

Not because of fights or drama — just life moving in different directions.

Back in school, we couldn't go a day without sharing everything. Now, it's like everyone's got their own world — work, family, responsibilities, new circles.

I guess growing up quietly replaces “daily talks” with “random memories.”

For me, there are a few I still talk to once in a while — mostly just checking in, sharing something funny, or wishing happy birthday. But it's not the same energy anymore.

Makes me wonder how others feel about this.

Do you still talk to your old school or childhood friends?

Or did everyone drift apart with time?

And do you ever feel like reconnecting, or do you just let it be part of life's flow?

Deany - October 5, 2025, 12:01 am

Nope , they can all frick off.

Oh_Well - October 5, 2025, 12:03 am

Not so much. I've done the same a while ago and checked my old DMs and I literally don't remember some of them. It was crazy

Jamika - October 5, 2025, 12:13 am

Just by coincidence, but unfortunately I've lost contact with most of them now.

sharn - October 5, 2025, 2:13 am

Not really, we drifted apart.

Life just got busy.

In?sane? - October 5, 2025, 2:41 am

Not really no, I have one that I might check up on every 1-2 years but that's about it.

Yanix - October 5, 2025, 2:46 am

Not that much but we still have communication through group chats.

Charlie Sheen - October 5, 2025, 11:34 pm

There's a group of us that met when we were in 6th grade that all still talk, almost daily.

aj33b9009 - October 8, 2025, 12:41 pm

No, unfortunately, they abandoned me, and I, of course, abandoned them.??

Assadi323232 - October 8, 2025, 12:45 pm

(Oct 4, 2025 11:58 PM)Mr. Node.js Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Lately I've been scrolling through my old chat lists and realizing how many people I used to talk to every single day are now just... gone.
Not because of fights or drama — just life moving in different directions.

Back in school, we couldn't go a day without sharing everything. Now, it's like everyone's got their own world — work, family, responsibilities, new circles.

I guess growing up quietly replaces “daily talks” with “random memories.”

For me, there are a few I still talk to once in a while — mostly just checking in, sharing something funny, or wishing happy birthday. But it's not the same energy anymore.

Makes me wonder how others feel about this.

Do you still talk to your old school or childhood friends?

Or did everyone drift apart with time?

And do you ever feel like reconnecting, or do you just let it be part of life's flow?

Yeah I stil have my friends for 10 years and the vibe is still the same. It's easy to lose track in life but your boys should always be there plops - October 8, 2025, 1:53 pm

Nah, we grew out of eachothers habits. Somwnare still up to no good and those that are straight edge now dont want to be involved

CryptoMancer - October 8, 2025, 2:09 pm

Nope everyone went their own way

Mr. Node.js - October 8, 2025, 2:15 pm

(Oct 8, 2025 02:09 PM)CryptoMancer Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Nope everyone went their own way

Yeah, that happens a lot. Life takes everyone in different directions, and sometimes it's hard to keep the same bond. Still, it's nice to look back at those times and remember how things used to be.

CryptoMancer - October 8, 2025, 2:20 pm

(Oct 8, 2025 02:15 PM)Mr. Node.js Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yeah, that happens a lot. Life takes everyone in different directions, and sometimes it's hard to keep the same bond. Still, it's nice to look back at those times and remember how things used to be.

Yep life pulls us in so many directions but those memories we share will always stay with us, when I go outside i still see some of my school friends and we shake hands and have a good talk.

RangoWorld - October 9, 2025, 1:08 am

Unfortunately, No. There has been a lot that has changed. Though I hope someday I'm able to talk to them like childhood friends