I didn't have a ton available, and windows update on my trading PC slowed me down, but was able to drop $27k on SUI at $1.95.

Real happy with that buy right now, already back up to $2.32.

Flash crash ate up all the liquidity, made the price drop way more violent than it really is. As new liquidity gets injected price will go back up pretty rapidly.

Envy - October 10, 2025, 2:53 pm

Seriously considering allocating a huge chunk of my portfolio into SUI right now.

Unbelievable re-entry point.

Done, didn't buy tons, just enough. Enough to be comfortable with the uncertainty.

thrudda - October 10, 2025, 6:34 pm

Been awhile since SUI is trading under $3, so far any hardware wallet that supports SUI?

Ledger and Keystone

SuiBall comes out soon and will be the nicest hardware experience for Sui (<https://suiball.com>)

It seems expensive imho, $150. Not sure why these hardware wallets are so costly.

I'd love to see your opinion on what coins are worth putting $10-25k into right now. I'd love to diversify part of my portfolio right now.

Hackers - October 11, 2025, 9:30 am

Chump change

The market has taken so many 30-50% crashes in the last few years, this is nothing.
Once you hold and buy more at 50% down... or worse. Then the market will know patience, resolve, and faith in long-term predictions.

I see a few meme coins that crashed hard, but that's not what I am talking about. A 50% crash or worse in BTC, ETH, and primary L2s for real business functions... That's a bloody day.
Bitcoin still at $112K, things are fine.

I have some buys set for the $70-90k range and am happy to see 112. I'd like to see 100-110 too. If people are upset now, then that's concerning. The fact we're still seeing BTC this high is bullish. I don't think this market shift is bad. It's healthy overall for what we need right now.

Some sell, some salivate

CMC has us at a rating of 35, in Fear.
In other words, it's time to make some purchases soon.

I'm making some strategic buys, holding off on others to see where things land.

If anyone is feeling down today.. Just fix it for next time.
You should always have cash for these moments. If you don't, you might've overbought recently.

I generally agree, but I will point out 3 ways where the SuiBall outshines Ledger Nano (a more reasonably priced alternative).

- It's made by Citadel, an org who have a reputation for uber-high quality hardware. It will feel like an Apple device. Sleek and smooth.
- No hardware wallets that support Sui currently support clear signing, they all require blind signing which introduces a degree of risk. SuiBall supports clear signing. Most hardware wallets treat Move as an afterthought, with SuiBall it has native support for all Move operators, transactions, and contracts.
- It has Sui apps built in, you will be able to perform actions on popular DeFi apps directly from the wallet.

These sound like good options. I want to investigate the apps

I like convenience as long as there is a reputable supply chain, software hash verification or other authenticity checks (consumer / client side), and transparency with any future security concerns.

I really like Sui, I'm a bull on that long-term without much hesitation at all. There is too much talent involved to ignore

I am excited to try more with Move as well. I've done a good amount with Solidity, FunC, Tolk, and others, but I want to really dig into Move.

Here's a snippet from this article that has more info about Suiball

<https://blog.sui.io/citadel-suiball-native-hardware-wallet/>

Quote:Suiball introduces a transparent, user-first approach to signing transactions called clear signing, which eliminates the guesswork common in legacy wallets with blind signing, one of the biggest security risks. Every transaction signed with Suiball is fully human-readable, presented through an intuitive modern UI, giving users the confidence to know exactly what they're approving. The wallet supports all native Sui assets such as WAL, DEEP, NS and NFTs, DeFi platforms such as Suilend, Bluefin, Cetus, Ika, complete roster of Bitcoin DeFi products and native Bitcoin with future plans for Gaming and Payments use cases as well.

"Suiball represents the next phase of Sui's device-layer strategy and extends Sui's position as the first Layer 1 blockchain investing substantially in dedicated consumer-grade devices," said Adeniyi Abiodun, co-founder and CTO for Mysten Labs, the original contributor to Sui. "With clear signing, Suiball offers a level of transaction transparency that is essential as BTCfi and other high-value use cases grow across the network."

Most people who shift from Solidity to Move only have incredible things to say about the ease of development. If you ever see Move vs Solidity comparisons, it's night and day how quick and easy it is to write in move.

Nice, yeah I've dabbled around a bit, but haven't dug into it that much.

I definitely would like to deploy a contract soon. I generally try to have at least one mainnet contract just for the heck of it, to explore & learn, etc.

Thanks, it was indeed a fresh one. I'm not sure how I managed to beat everyone else to posting about the market crash, even Omni by just a few moments. Hard work and determination, I guess.

I recommend reaching out to the moderators or administrators of HF if this dire issue continues to weigh heavily on you and those around you. Surely some sort of outcome that solves this travesty and allows you guys to focus on other aspects of your life can be found and enacted. Thoughts and prayers, homie. I don't quite understand why their group has this grudge with you? It's like me going against Mayweather in the ring, crypto-wise. By the way, the wet raccoon is literally playing games. I am feeling like I am living in a simulation, one day he says tariffs and the other day "meh, I didn't mean it like that".

I am looking eagerly to exit this market Q4 and next bear I'll just stack BTC. Just to let you know, the burn of AZERO is still visible on my hand. Haha.

I'm looking to pick up some more buys with expected corrections I predict are coming.

I'll accumulate in a bear for sure, but not afraid to re-invest in crypto either. I used a lot of my crypto last year to push a lot into quantum/lidar/tech/ai/military stocks. I want to re-up my crypto to balance those gains out a bit & keep things stable.

I don't think we've seen the last crash of this cycle yet. This was far too tame tbh.

I complained about people shitposting and spamming and only using AI in their posts, all things that are generally viewed negatively in a forum setting, and it offended them for some reason.

Now they're threatening me in convo, trying to intimidate me, coming up with strange narratives that never happened

Example: "BV1's belief he is someone special because of a .net rat sold years ago" Like, I haven't even mentioned any of that shit in years lmao. You're thinking about that stuff, not me.

All I'm looking for is for this section to be high quality and to cater towards discussion coming from people who care about crypto and put critical thought into their posts. I'm not sure why that's such a bad thing, or why people are so vehemently opposing it. It's like they want a free pass to low quality post wherever they'd like, and by saying something about it, I've turned into public enemy #1. I don't act poorly towards noobs or people trying to learn, I don't act poorly with those I disagree with. I'm only an ass towards those who are spamming this section to make their post count go up, or people who are ai generating shit content. If we wanted to chat with AI about crypto, we could just go to ChatGPT.

There are a 100 other sections to shit post in if it's such a big deal.

I'm not too sure myself, I see a lot of profits in NASDAQ, I feel like there are whales waiting for a proper correction (came close this weekend, but not quite) to push money back into crypto.

Agreed. I think a lot of people also are forgetting that with institutional investors, there is more stability.

Things don't pump to "lambo levels" nearly as easily, but on the plus side, they don't tank as easily with funds and long-term investors.

The psychological barrier is definitely annoying.

Even at $50k+ bitcoin there were billionaires saying it is not a good investment... That's a huge psych barrier.

If a billionaire can't throw down $10K on a side bet, then... that's a social thing, not really a numbers game at that point.

Very good point. Even going past ETH; you can see it with Solana and Chainlink too for example; they're starting to attract institutional attention for speed and infrastructure, but retail hype still drives a lot of the movement.

I can't rule that out by any means, that's definitely possible.

I don't think it's necessarily bad if the crypto market bleeds for a few days to secure more support at 100k+ and shake out weaker hands.

People who bought at 120 with dreams of 200 shouldn't be concerned if it drops to 101-104k

If you can justify buying at 120k, you can definitely justify buying more at 101-104k imo

I'm looking for lower :)

exactly!

One thing you can observe to try to get a feel for what's going on is look at fear & greed

<https://www.binance.com/en/square/fear-and-greed-index>

<https://coinmarketcap.com/charts/fear-and-greed-index/>

<https://charts.bitbo.io/fear-greed/>

<https://alternative.me/crypto/fear-and-greed-index/>

If BTC goes down closer to 100, or sub-100, I expect we'll hit near max fear

This is usually a good indicator to buy, and we're not out of fear yet

It's not always accurate, but it's a great way to gut check how others think and anticipate that fearful holders sell, and greedy holders can be left holding the bag.
