Thread: Darkvision a good RAT

Xmaster - October 11, 2025, 2:08 pm

I just wanted to ask because it's been on my mind

DramaKing - October 11, 2025, 2:46 pm

Ask in the official thread, but it is one if the better ones.

im hearing good things, 60$ lifetime, nice cheap

Hreidmar - October 13, 2025, 3:52 am

It's not the prettiest and flashiest but you get a RAT that has all the basic features and more with really great stability and with future updates...all that for INSANELY CHEAP one time fee of 60$.

The value you get here especially nowadays, is a complete no-brainer...

I'm still surprised the dev didn't raise the price yet, I honestly wish he opened up a donation link just so we could throw few coins here and there to show support and appreciation. <3

This is a lifetime license that works until your first problems. The developer will not help if there are problems. And you'll have to buy a lifetime license again. Customer support is not provided! I'm warning you!

DarkVision is a great remote access tool, and stable. I haven't had any crashes. Updates are accessible with a button. ??

(Love the Emojis ????).

vinmarianni - October 22, 2025, 3:32 pm

thanks for warning, do you have any better experience with different one?

IMO the best is Pulsar (not biased at all)

I checked it out, and it's not very stable.

Sometimes fake clients connect to the server by themselves.

When installing a plugin, the client sometimes crashes, closes, and then connects again.
The design also looks like nobody cared about it.
That's basically what I noticed.

Are you using any crypters? I'm using it without and I have clients for over 6 months that didn't had any issues at all.

And fake clients?? What are you smoking bro....are you trying to get clients by randomly spreading your payload like it's 2010 and getting honeypot clients instead haha?

As I said in my original post already, yes the UI is not the prettiest but it's functional and for 60$ as one time fee that's a bargain...the value you get here is insane. If you like pretty UI then yeah you'll have to shell out way more and will likely end up on subscription.

I'm rat developer.

I should've explained better, sorry for any confusion.

By "fake client," I mean connections to the server that send no data, just empty or brief socket connections.

When you open a socket using port forwarding or tunneling tools like Portmap or Playit (not directly through your modem), you may see sockets connecting on their own after a while.

This often stems from how tunneling services route traffic or from misconfigured clients on the network.

In short, when your system is open to the internet, unexpected connections can occur even without your action.

And..

The optimization, design and support are terrible.

With technical issues or? Vendors have to be careful who they interact with and respond about/talk about but if technical and not related to other machines then that's a bummer.
