Halloween and then Christmas is coming up. When was the last time you sat down with your whole family and hopefully had good time?

In 2007 my mother's side of the family got together at a park and we all had lunch. That was the only time I can remember anything like that.

MY family, every day. All family including parents? Hard to count since they're divorced... With one side... a couple of months ago.

Hm maybe a few months ago. I love them and it's cool and all but can be draining. Excited for the holidays though.

Just recently actually my mom's birthday was on the 3rd so we all got together

That was during our religious holiday (Eid al-Adha), when my family gathers with relatives on the eve of the holiday, and we stay up all night together.

I suppose the definition of family is subjective. Cause some people have big and small.

Family is whomever you consider a part of your bigger (whole) family.

If you're asking for something specific. At least should have all the kids and their kids of one grandpa.

Last Christmas Eve, we gathered at my parents place.
Everyone brought something and we shared stories.

My family gets together on Thanksgiving and Christmas. It's pretty fun when considering how we have relatively the same sense of humor. We set down our differences and share funny stories while eating too much food together.

I usually just spend time with my mom and dad, and that's more than enough for me. but yeah I really value having a supportive and encouraging family

Eran - October 22, 2025, 6:27 am

Actually it was 2 months ago. Been rough for me so I isolated. Next one will be in less than a month so mentally preparing for it.

Damn, it was over 10 years ago. When I graduated from a vocational school.
After that I have been just spiraling down; Never got a job in the line I wanted to. (Computer tech)
Now I am miserable and work in security and doing bouncer gigs every weekend just to keep the lights on at home.

I don't even remember, which is pretty scary to be honest. At least we have Christmas in a few months.
