Exactly as stated. Where would you like to go if money was not a thing to worry about?

onlineuser | D3RFER - October 29, 2025, 12:47 pm

You can visit any country on a low budget, it just depends on how you do it.

Maybe North Korea or Antarctica, their isolation from the world just makes me curious.

If budget is really not a problem? I'd book a 3-month around the world trip and visit 10 different countries.

JoshAllen - October 29, 2025, 6:17 pm

If I could go to only country it would be Tokyo. There would be so much I want to do that I feel I would get the most bang for my buck.

To be honest, it's not really about the budget for me. it's more about the way of living and appreciating what you already have. If I had all the resources you mentioned, I'd actually prefer to stay in my own country, Malaysia, and explore the places I haven't had the chance to visit yet. There's still so much here that I haven't fully experienced.

But if the question is specifically about going abroad, then I'd choose Japan. The culture, discipline, and lifestyle there are something I truly admire.

It's on my definitely go to list, it's a bit expensive for me for the time being, also I need some stay time there

Deany - October 30, 2025, 2:03 am

Let's go to jp and hk

Bro, I've seen it many times in movies when curiosity leads to trouble. They wouldn't lie in movies ?

I don't know what's tougher, North Korea or Antarctica. I think it has to do with the procedures.

If I had to boil it down to the absolute essentials, I'd say these are the non-negotiables. Zermatt & The Matterhorn, Jungfrauoch, Lucerne A Scenic Train.

I read someone's autobiography about their life in and their escape from North Korea. It doesn't sound interesting. It only sounds extremely horrible.

Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and perhaps some Albanian cities. In my childhood, I was fascinated by Bram Stoker's Dracula novel and his descriptions of the Carpathian Mountains and some old parts of Transylvania.

I'm a family man now, but the fascination never dies, so why not?
