

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Whats your go-to browser setup for privacy and performance?

Artemisss - November 7, 2025, 6:19 pm

I've bounced between Brave, Firefox, and even Chromium builds. Each one has its quirks. I like privacy, but I also hate when sites break because of strict blocking.

What combo do you use extensions, settings, or tricks that gives you the best of both worlds?

blackrose_x0x0 - November 7, 2025, 10:44 pm

Firefox (I love you firefox), Mullvad Browser, and of course TOR.

At least for firefox, a lot of pretty standard extensions like Privacy Badger, uBlock, etc...

RangoWorld - November 7, 2025, 11:28 pm

I use Firefox. Have been using it for like a decade now.

I have a couple Ad Blockers.

alabamablooddog - November 14, 2025, 9:24 pm

Firefox works well with some about:config changes. Remember that the more extensions you use, the slower your browser will be.

DewGho - November 15, 2025, 3:30 am

I also used Firefox and Chrome for a very long time, but switched to Brave.

It's a good browser with flexible security settings.

I've also heard about the MULLVAD browser, but haven't tried it yet.

Many people recommend it too.

alabamablooddog - November 15, 2025, 4:30 am

(Nov 15, 2025 04:30 AM)DewGho Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I also used Firefox and Chrome for a very long time, but switched to Brave.

It's a good browser with flexible security settings.

I've also heard about the MULLVAD browser, but haven't tried it yet.

Many people recommend it too.

I like Brave because you can enjoy watching YouTube videos without having to deal with ads. You can also use Brave on your iPhone to watch videos in the background.