Thread: \$400 OBO - Dictionary Domain Finder v1 For Sale

Hackers - November 10, 2025, 8:29 am

I created a tool that finds available domains, and filters down as best as possible.

You won't find this online for free or easily. Most of the domain finder tools limit to 6-8+ char domains, or scrambled domains with numbers or symbols instead of raw dictionary words.

Words in this tool are set up for Unix system dictionaries, but if you are on Windows and need a different dictionary, please let me know. I will modify it for a small upcharge, or you can run on Linux/Mac.

[contract=tid]Start Contract[/contract]

Taking offers.

- > Scan thousands of dictionary word domains
- > .com, .net, .org, and alt TLD supported
- > Custom or personal OS dictionaries for wordlists
- > Scans DNS, Whois, and domain data to filter for available domains at normal prices

The tool also supports most popular TLDs, and several newer TLDs as well. Depending on the TLD, results can vary.

For best results, 5+ on .com, 4+ on .net/org, and 3-4+ on other TLDs, to get good scan results.

This codebase is written in Python with a bash helper script too for install/setup.

Example of 5char .to domain findings. These are some from the first batch of 1,000 out of a list of 8,278 available .to 5chars can be seen in the spoiler below:

There are still chances that it finds some reserved domains, but this is because certain platforms auto-apply premium pricing to certain words or character counts, without officially reserving or registering the domain. I am working on an update to account for this on the primary registrars people use.

As a proof of concept, I can provide up to 2 people with vouch examples of 4 letter .org domains that are dictionary words, and still available. I have a number of these to demonstrate the tool's effectiveness. I can also run scans on other TLD types for min/max letter counts (always dictionary words only).

Open to offers. I'm not going to give a public price or PM price until I have at least 3 offers. Just one domain name w/ a short dictionary word can cost a lot, and this tool can be run daily for years to always find new domains when they expire.

The tool also supports most popular TLDs, and several newer TLDs as well. Depending on the TLD, results can vary.

For best results, 5+ on .com, 4+ on .net/org, and 3-4+ on other TLDs, to get good scan results.

If you start a Vouch contract with me I'll send you some of the V1 results for .org so you can see what i mean :)

Example scan:

In V2 I will improve logging to show better stats, and also incremental logging instead of only dumping logs at the end.

I got so many dictionary words in scans across other TLDs too :)

Nobody that has asked for a vouch has actually started a vouch contract with me, so yes.

If anyone is interested, I can take $400 for it, but I do not think it's worth selling for cheaper. It can snipe up amazing domains.

I'm pricing it at $400 minimum because I know realistically i'll need to help the buyer test w/ their own machine for DNS lookups, WHOIS, and natural networking rate limits. It's not hard, but wanted to mention the reason.
