Node.js 24 LTS Is Here—Your Backend Has No Business Being Stuck in 2022

Node.js 24 has officially entered LTS, bringing a modern runtime, new Web APIs, and long-term support through 2028. While the upgrade exposes outdated tooling and dependencies, it offers teams a chance to modernize safely, improve performance, and align their stack with today's JavaScript ecosystem.

'22? Bitch what, I just got given some Arduino code that the last guy who contributed to it made changes upstream and never pinned the commit anywhere, and this was in a public repo.

I would still be rocking PHP backends if I wasn't aware of the joys of Flask and other horrible abominations of God.
