Thread: A "TrustPilot" specifically for cheat providers?

makima - December 1, 2025, 2:17 am

Yo everyone. As we all know, the market is flooded with tons of cheat providers and resellers. They all have their own websites or threads on different forums. The problem is, it's getting really hard to tell apart real reviews from the fake/botted ones. Some providers have great support, others are terrible, and some just hide/delete negative feedback on their own platforms.

I'm thinking of building a reliable, dedicated review platform (basically a TrustPilot clone) strictly for cheat brands and sellers where customers can leave honest ratings. Wdyt? Is this a solid idea or a waste of time?

Honestly i kinda like this but you should ask the cheat maker if they also agree to be PART of the listing because some on them want to stay low profile. They like to make their advertising made by the cheat itself and having people talking about it to other without promoting or having people talking about them too much in public.

BUT YEAH man would be awesome
