Hey everyone,

I'm returning to the community after being away for a while. I was previously involved in white-hat security and OSINT, and as a teenager I babbled in ratting the odd pedo out there. I'm here to learn as much as I can, refresh old skills, and pick up new ones as the space continues to evolve.

My main interests are open-source intelligence, digital footprint analysis, identity resolution, and methods for locating individuals using different tools, OSINT methods publicly available information. I'm especially keen to learn from the depth of knowledge here — including the guides, books, tools, and paid resources that people clearly put a lot of work into.

I'm here with a genuine learning mindset, respect for the effort others contribute, and the intention to be an active, positive part of the community again.

Looking forward to learning, contributing where appropriate, and being part of the crew again.

Regards,

Observer
