Thread: Binding Files

ShellPower - February 2, 2026, 5:30 am so i am trying to figure out if it is possible to bind 2 files to run as one, and i don't mean something fancy like docs or images, but 2 clean executables .exe or .msi for example

How would you go about it?

Would the binding itself might trigger AV alarms even the 2 separate files themselves are clean (and i intentionally say clean and not FUD - let's consider we are binding regular executables for this example)

Any insights appreciated, sorry for the 5 y\o level of mine

Thought this would be a fun one to write

A simple way to file bind without the hassle. Requires a clean payload.

In the realm of this old school stuff check this out:

The brother of PE binding, mainly due to the final payload size being more convincing in practice; educational practices that is.

No you don't have to. You'll sit 1:1 with the authorities soon telling them why you do what you do if it's enabling cybercrime.
Good luck!

Anecdotally, using a public binder will do this. Now a .MSI packages all of a program's files together. You could build a .MSI from your exe files. I did hear from a former supervisor that a certificate from Microsoft costing thousands of dollars is required or something, but hey, binding anything to a signed MSI would invalidate the signature anyway.

I think what Marlboro posted copy the real signature to the second file, but i wasn't able to use it, and AI refused to help me so far lol :P

And that was the good part... after it did agree to help, it made me install 10 different bundlers and packagers, each tweaked for an hour and none worked properly lol

It's something that I struggle with, but have you considered using a debugger to put code into code caves?

Not even sure what that means for my use case... i am inside the cave, now what?

Not sure how a debugger will serve me, i tried many "regular" cmd and powershell types manipulation scripts but the final result never worked as i wish
