DEEP vs ENA:

High Risk or Smart Stability?

Which one do you think is better to invest in, between

- DeepBook Protocol / DEEP
- Ethena / ENA

My opinion is that if you really believe in SUI, then it probably makes more sense to go with DEEP.

Yes, I understand it's riskier than SUI itself, but if SUI grows (as many of us expect in the future), then DEEP definitely has much bigger potential to do a x5, maybe even x10. ?

But if SUI drops, then the losses in DEEP will likely be more severe as well. In my opinion, buying now could be a good investment.

In short, DEEP is "dependent" on SUI.

As for ENA,

The upside would be as big as DEEP?

ENA feels more stable, less dependent on a single blockchain, but, yeah you could still make solid gains. x5 yes, but I don't think will be x10. ?

What do you guys think, which one would you choose?

Personally, I'd go with DEEP.?

I don't really understand thisahaha, but I asked AI and this is the answer it gave.

- Go DEEP if you're bullish on SUI and okay with big swings.
- Go ENA if you prefer growth but with more stability.

DeepBook is well positioned if Sui's DeFi landscape ever takes off again.

I've been accumulating DEEP on its way down, trying to achieve whale status.

Added another 10% to my DEEP holdings.

I don't know what to say about this "war", what will happen, whether there will really be something between the US and Iran or if they just want to create too much fear among people, but if something does happen, even something small, it will greatly influence the crypto market, and not only that... let's hope everything will be okay.

But yes, for sure DEEP is something to accumulate as much as possible. But as I said, if something starts, even a "lost rocket," then prices will drop a lot ?.
