

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Living For a Greater Purpose

Oracle Services - February 11, 2026, 10:13 pm

When vision goes beyond what is narrowly perceived (Narrow as in limited to an individual's own physical awareness), the mission and purpose grow greater than what's only present or potentially proven by the ego (Where the ego here is selfish with a 3rd-dimensional limit). A humble and brief research of the external including history, economics and geography on one side, and the internal in terms of spirituality led my continuous path of expansion attainment to grasp and absorb the concept of "living for a greater purpose". The physical is temporary with constant turnover, the purpose is sought regardless.

Do you think the concept of "living for a greater purpose" is valid through this perspective? Or would you look at this differently?

SIM-4331310 - February 11, 2026, 11:58 pm

Interesting perspective indeed

RangoWorld - February 12, 2026, 12:04 am

I think everyone should strive to live life to the highest purpose they can think of. I also believe that our purpose of life should be beyond us as self. So that we continue to go on that path and never be satisfied.

Oracle Services - February 12, 2026, 2:46 am

(Feb 12, 2026 01:04 AM)RangoWorld Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I think everyone should strive to live life to the highest purpose they can think of. I also believe that our purpose of life should be beyond us as self. So that we continue to go on that path and never be satisfied.

I agree, I also believe that satisfaction has to be linked to the journey itself (Where the journey continuously regenerates the energy flow instead of limiting it to physical milestones, in which I believe are a double-edged sword).

(Feb 12, 2026 12:58 AM)SIM-4331310 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Interesting perspective indeed
Thank you, any insight to share?

SIM-4331310 - February 12, 2026, 2:51 am

(Feb 12, 2026 03:46 AM)Oracle Services Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I agree, I also believe that satisfaction has to be linked to the journey itself (Where the journey continuously regenerates the energy flow instead of limiting it to physical milestones, in which I believe are a double-edged sword).

Thank you, any insight to share?
My take is that I couldn't have said it better myself

R5N3T - February 12, 2026, 3:37 am

Yeah, I think it makes sense. When you look beyond yourself, life just feels more meaningful than chasing temporary stuff. Everything physical comes and goes, but having a bigger purpose gives you direction. Still, everyone sees that "bigger purpose" in their own way.

Oracle Services - February 13, 2026, 9:57 pm

(Feb 12, 2026 03:51 AM)SIM-4331310 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) My take is that I couldn't have said it better myself

Great to hear.

(Feb 12, 2026 04:37 AM)R5N3T Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yeah, I think it makes sense. When you look beyond yourself, life just feels more meaningful than chasing temporary stuff. Everything physical comes and goes, but having a bigger purpose gives you direction. Still, everyone sees that "bigger purpose" in their own way.

I agree that meaning comes from what is perceived as "timeless", as well as the part where everyone sees the "bigger purpose" in their own way (Although mostly biased which is inefficient, but no process is strictly "linear").

Andy Walker - February 14, 2026, 12:38 am

The problem with attaching your life to the physical is that it never affords true joy. It is like a drug.

It is a nice high when you buy something nice or go out with friends. Then, it ends, then you go back to the mean.

True joy comes with chasing something worth dying for. If you wake up wanting to do it, then that's purpose. It is beyond just physical. It a dream we all love to achieve, whether we're successful or not isn't important.

We just want to do it.

We will travel through many trials and obstacles to reach it.

That's life best lived.

mx8n - February 22, 2026, 12:07 pm

muchos mensajes que te hacen reflexionar esta excelnete todo

Oracle Services - February 26, 2026, 11:35 pm

(Feb 14, 2026 01:38 AM)Andy Walker Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) The problem with attaching your life to the physical is that it never affords true joy. It is like a drug.

It is a nice high when you buy something nice or go out with friends. Then, it ends, then you go back to the mean.

True joy comes with chasing something worth dying for. If you wake up wanting to do it, then that's purpose. It is beyond just physical. It a dream we all love to achieve, whether we're successful or not isn't important.

We just want to do it.

We will travel through many trials and obstacles to reach it.

That's life best lived.

Indeed, experiencing life is "beautiful" and the focus doesn't always have to be "task-oriented" in terms of peace only happening when something is complete, that's what technology is for, if you know what I mean.

(Feb 22, 2026 01:07 PM)mx8n Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) muchos mensajes que te hacen reflexionar esta

excelnete todo

Click this message for a good start here.

7 - February 27, 2026, 12:15 am

Yes 100% it remind me of what i wrote when I was at my lowest which is in this this thread.

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=6313719>

Especially the part of shinning your light upon others rather than trying to light up yourself.
A torch shines wider when shined upon others and if everyone was to shine on other rather than themselves the world would be a brighter place.

DAL-SHA - February 27, 2026, 9:28 am

Interesting !

Enjoyed reading this thread sir ! ?

Best of luck with everything you do and I salute you sir !

Exkabal - February 27, 2026, 9:31 am

I think the idea of living for a greater purpose can be meaningful, but it really depends on how each person defines that purpose. For some it's spiritual, for others it's contributing to society, family, or knowledge...

I'd say the perspective you described is one way to frame it, but it's not the only valid lens andd purpose can also be grounded in everyday actions and tangible impact, not just something beyond the physical.

RiveR29 - February 27, 2026, 12:41 pm

(Feb 13, 2026 10:57 PM)Oracle Services Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Great to hear.

I agree that meaning comes from what is perceived as "timeless", as well as the part where everyone sees the "bigger purpose" in their own way (Although mostly biased which is inefficient, but no process is strictly "linear").

For me there are two types of purpose for humans, collective (Making sure mankind survives and thrives) And then there is the individual. And that depends on the person. For me I have no damn idea of my purpose. Perhaps trying to just survive, or trying to be a productive member of society. The possibilities are endless, I just do not see any purpose in a way, and I am not saying that it is a bad thing. The purpose can change with time, and life in general.

I hope I get a purpose someday, or that I find something. Yet as of now I feel like I have no purpose, so ill just go day by day, maybe something pops up.

Kisame - February 27, 2026, 1:53 pm

People trying to find purpose in their life, die without a purpose and miss out on life. At least that's what I think about it.

Thoth - May 17, 2026, 2:47 pm

I think thats a big part of what we are supposed to do in our lives, learning to shed the ego and live life through the lenses of the mental and intellectual (the mind). Learning to do so is a huge part of overcoming the indoctrination that everyone undergo when living in today's society.

Redx_1188 - May 28, 2026, 7:20 am

If it's 100% valid is questionable but I'd say you're on the right path.

