While i hate to do this, business is business.. i respect enlil wolf as a member of this forum that brings value, but i lent him $1k on January 25th, and it was supposed to be paid by the 31st of january and i still haven't received it yet and it's been 16 days, i don't think he will scam me because his HF account is worth more than that, but it is what it is.

I totally understand. Same goes for KYO, my respect for him goes beyond mere words as I have known him for years at this point. KYO has been continuously informed on the delays and why it is happening. However, rest assured, its going to be resolved shortly :)

You two need to be careful. I have heard in the past that playing bookie or loanshark is against the rules. I didn't find anything in the rules specifically about contracts/market though, only this 1 reference that says you can't request a loan. So it might be okay?

I have faith in Enlil Wolf to pay you back because if not then the real Enlil, An, and Enki will surely destine him to an eternal afterlife of pain and sorrow - the words are invoked. It is written :)

Yeah, i am not playing loanshark because i am not charging him interest, i would never do that on this forum. But i appreciate the concern !

He has indeed kept me informed and why it's happening, just needed to open up the dispute because it's more than fair at this point and like i said nothing personal, just business.

It honestly surprises me that two guys (who both seem more than well-off) would end up opening a deal dispute on HF over a $1000 loan. No disrespect to either of them, I'm not trying to start a conflict, I just personally find it hard to wrap my head around. Maybe it's just me. Just my two cents. Good luck and all the best to both.

Honestly , i completely understand you , but i do separate business and friendship very well. 2 completely different worlds for me that i don't mix. When it's business i expect someone to keep their word and part of the business, if not then just have to do what i have to do, right?

I don't think it was business because you didn't charge any profit/interest.

You let him borrow money as a friend.

Many of my friends have borrowed so much from me and still haven't returned, i wish i could open DD on them haha but they are all IRL friends

Same here. If I let a friend "borrow" money I just always assume I won't get it back and I treat it as a gift. If I do end up getting it back that's nice, but if I don't that is what I'm expecting so it won't ruin the relationship.

Completely agree with you. When someone gives you their word and don't stick to their words, then the trust drops. You were right for opening this dispute. I would do the same

?inimalist - February 28, 2026, 8:55 am

Omniscient can solve this? Because it's loan and I'm not sure if it's allowed on HF.

But it still sucks when someone asks you for money and you help them, and in the end you're the one who ends up in this situation. I really don't like asking anyone for money (like a loan), even when I don't have enough to eat...

It's not a loan because i'm not charging or making any money on him , i just let him borrow 1k i would never do a loan on HF

If i were you i would offer him a payment plan before going directly down the DD route.

Payment plan like every week $150-200 and if he misses any payment than directly go to DD

The defining feature of a loan is that the money is expected to be repaid, not that interest is charged.

With that being said, I don't read it as against the rules here on HF.

The rules say "Donation Begging: Requests for donations, loans, investments, or gifts are not permitted."

and

"No donation begging or fundraising threads: This includes requests for donations, loans, investors, or financial assistance of any kind."

There is no donation begging or begging thread. This is a interest-free loan between friends. I think you're clear as far as the rules go.

Ash Ketchum - March 2, 2026, 9:03 pm

i think its safe to say paid back or not the substantial delay and lack of contact will forever taint the friendship.

TehHaxx - March 5, 2026, 4:48 am

Just my two cents as I've been around a while with loaning friends money both online and IRL, so have seen some signs and the way its communicated... but my senses are going off like mad, this Enlil guy has no plans on returning your money and I wouldn't be surprised if there's a whole list of other people who have been conned out of their money - the constant fake reassurances and missed deadlines is just a common tactic to buy more time before the inevitable happens.

I pray I'm wrong but it's a lesson nonetheless

• Enlil Wolf • - March 5, 2026, 10:57 pm

Thanks to everyone coming in to share their two cents. I don't feel obligated to respond to any of the things mentioned as everyone is just sharing their humble opinions and I respect that.

Just as Ky0 mentioned in the beginning, our friendship is totally different from business and it's not going to be tainted over something like this as I was the one who suggested to do this in the first place with the contracts in place. There had been some unfortunate delays which he was made aware of.

So, looking forward to putting this behind. Unlike how most people may perceive or assume, if I wanted to scam like the hundreds of others here in this forum over the years, I'd have done that during my 7 year tenure here ?

Ky0 has been informed, that my funds are ready to be sent over to him ?
