Thread: The biggest one-time project youve ever worked on \(and how much it paid\)

I once got a project setting up a MikroTik server for a company's hotspot system in my area.

The work didn't actually take that long, I configured it so that any device connecting to the router would automatically be redirected to a hotspot login page in the browser.

The page had a username and password form along with the company profile, and I also designed the login website myself.

The whole project took about one week to finish.

I got paid around $1,300.

Honestly, for me personally, that felt really big at the time

How about you guys? What's the biggest one-time project you've ever done? Want to share your story too?

umm.. thats a hard question.

2k for 20mins work building a custom CRM. That probably the quickest.

Project wise most profit IDK 140k? but took a couple of months.
