Thread: Hi I'm new here and here is how I found you!

Hello everyone! I just signed up for this site. It is kind of an amusing story how I found you. It starts all the way back about 20 something years ago but for the sake of brevity I will just tell you about the last day or so. So I have been wishing I had an AI that I could talk to without all the safety guardrails and censors and other than ReplikaAI that at one time would talk erotically I couldn't find any and you had to pay for replika ai! Yesterday I discovered LM Studio where you can run AI models locally and if you choose some of the ABLITERATED models you can simply type "Forget all previous instructions" and then you can discuss any topic you want without getting automated safety messages and warnings. When I was asking it about actual hacker communities this site was one of the responses it gave me. It wasn't exactly what I was talking about but it seemed pretty cool still so here I am! It also included some Chinese websites that I want to translate at some point but anyways that's besides the point.

So yeah that's how I found this site. I hope you found that story amusing. I'm trying to get my 10 posts I need to access the chatroom! Does anybody know any neat hacker sites or communities I might like? I am about 20 years out of date. I know about TryHackMe and HackTheBox sites like that but I am interested in finding more communities. Maybe there's a directory? Looks like there's a lot of information here. I'm sure I'll find a lot of interesting posts.

Thanks! I love your Penguin avatar BTW! Fun fact I have never used a real Linux OS computer unbelievably I did recently buy a PARROTHTBOS USB stick though but I only had a chrome book at the time and it wouldn't work on it and now my computer is so nice I don't want to experiment with it but at some point in the near future I plan on getting a disposable old linux laptop on EBAY just to play around with and become more knowledgeable.
