Physical items that are in need of the war effort: Iron, Steel, Lead, Brass, will spike in times of war.

Ammo is not made without lead and brass.

and if you don't think any major nation states don't have a minimal supply of 6 months to a year supply of ammo would be a poor lapse of judgment.

I was thinking fallout shelter and buying your own shells and gun powder. You could start a bullet factory.

The defense and related industries would be the ones. Lockheed Martin was up 2.6% on Friday. Monday should be better.

That company is an absolute monster in the market, 46% YTD , and with the global news and how the economy is going , it has lots of room to go up

Hmmm , interesting ..

I did think of that few hours ago , and I think the assets are : Batteries , Gasoline , Canned / Dry food , Primal stuff like matches or lighters or tents and ropes and axes ! Just anything that isn't dependent on technology I guess !

Phobia_ - March 1, 2026, 6:48 am

Gasoline, Electricity shares, grocery stores much more too

Tyr - March 1, 2026, 6:59 am

Precious metals are a good one but nobody mentioned Palantir or anything similar (Lockheed is close I guess).

Omniscient - March 1, 2026, 9:21 am

Precious metals of all types. Gold and silver for rarity and value but also metals like copper, nickel, and steel used in arms.

Also, oil, because military runs on fuels, not solar.

Jamika - March 1, 2026, 9:22 am

Gold and silver , and food ofc

KyO - March 1, 2026, 9:53 am

I think Gold and Silver has a lot more room for upside , few people i know bought LEAP options on them a year ago, great assets.
