Is this a serious question or are you trolling?

Oil is rising, no shit.

Check the news out.

Plenty of money to be made.

Oil has not yet been priced in to future contracts, I wouldn't worry too much long term. If you want to make money on the short term, watch the dollar, WTI, Brent, and pay attention to the news.

UCO offers most leverage if you want to play options. I would say be careful, the train left the station over a week ago. Still can make money if you time it right, pulled 225% on UCO calls this week.

Check fertilizer, plastics, shipping companies, container costs, consumer staples. Etc

You could just go broad market since they're putting marines on the ground. Spy puts printed today.

It's going to be a long 2-3 weeks. Keep an eye on oil future contracts pricing in these higher numbers. I think August is still in 70s. Once the curve (all future contracts for 26 starts pricing in high oil, then you know to use it as an indicator. Don't get trapped buy USO at a high unless you're doing a spread. Your loss becomes capped at the premium and gains are as well capped. Less risky than a straight long or short.

Stay safe in the markets

NFA. Just an opinion.

And don't listen to Trump saying "war is nearly done" lol

Centcom updates are usually a little delayed but best accuracy for volatile moves. Unless you're watching the order book all day.

Also defense contractors. Ones who build our interceptors and jets.

Lmt, rtx, etc

Once a trader consistently reads price action and develops a system aligned with their risk tolerance and execution style, it makes sense to expand beyond stocks and forex into commodities and futures markets.

Assets like oil and agricultural products offer distinct volatility profiles and can provide additional trading opportunities.
