Thread: A study done on HackForum's contract system.

CL1B - March 12, 2026, 2:57 pm

Interesting find from '20, although I do think David was smelling own farts indexing public contract only.. knowing that the majority is private (I'm betting on this, not sure).

To each their own, but he done that on the clock LOL; got paid for communicating HF has a trading system and ACTING and starts acting as if his index accurately represents that. This is why most of you should get of your lazy chair and your parents house and just go work in cyber sec, you'll earn a shit ton for just farting out shit. As long as you do that 50 min presentation you were supposed to do on Monday, LMAO.

I honestly thought it was you who did the study lol.

You would be the most unemployed guy in the world to actually do that lmaooo there's apart of me thats happy this was done just because its good to see EBOOKS being the least sold thing which once upon a time was not the case, i always thought society was slowing becoming more stupid but it seems some people have realised ebooks are infact just written scams.

Contracts for rep points ? Isn't that against hf rules?

I would have expected hacking tools to be higher up on the list

Like I said, the guy is smelling his own farts doing a study on just the public contracts while the majority is private.

Ebooks

Oh this is hilarious. They really ran a case study on HF contracts.

I love how "Reputation points" makes up "6%" of all HF contracts. As you can tell, this guy really and truly knows what he's doing and should be trusted as an analyst!

I really wonder how he got these stats for total number of contracts and "actors" (aka members):

Also, apparently HF members earn Bytes by posting Amazon reviews lmao:

What a joke ?
