It advertises in the thread that this reports spoofing attempts but advertises it allows spoofing? is it both or one?

Is it both? The thread says it reports spoofing attempts, but the banner advertises hosting that allows spoofing. I'm just trying to understand whether the forum is for reporting spoofing, providing spoofing services, or both.

Oh forum test. I understand the angle. But on one thread wouldnt it prove neither.

You purchased the Cambodia VPS listing, but your post makes it sound like you purchased an ASN or a pre-made "spoof list." Neither is what was advertised.

Before purchasing, you could have contacted us and asked who the underlying provider is, what access is included, and exactly what the service provides. We are happy to answer those questions before an order.

You also had access to the Terms of Service and Refund Policy before purchasing. Please read them carefully before making accusations publicly.

If you expected a specific type of server access, you should have contacted support first rather than purchasing and then claiming that you "just spent $20 for an ASN."

Regarding your comment that you already have a .txt containing spoofed IPs: that's exactly why the service information is provided the listing isn't selling a random text file. The listing identifies the datacenter, country, virtualization type, network speed, reported spoofing status, price, and other information so buyers can evaluate it before purchasing.

If the service was not what you expected, contact us privately with your order details and we can review exactly what was delivered. Publicly misrepresenting the product instead of contacting support isn't going to solve the issue.

Unfortunately, based on this interaction, we will not be providing further service to you after this matter is resolved.

For future buyers: please read the listing, Terms, and Refund Policy and contact us before purchasing if you need clarification about the provider, access method, or service specifications.

No hard feelings but please don't purchase first and ask what you bought afterward.

Let's clear this up, because at this point several people are commenting without actually reading the thread or understanding what they purchased.

First, spoofer.network is not selling "an ASN" or a random .txt file. The service is presented as a provider/datacenter resource and information service, with the listing showing things such as the datacenter, provider type, location, network capacity, pricing, and reported status.

Jason later admitted:

Quote:"tbh i only blame my dumbass for not reading"

That's important. If you purchase something without reading the product description and then expect a completely different product, that isn't evidence that the product was misrepresented.

If you aren't sure what a plan includes, contact us BEFORE purchasing. Ask the provider name, access method, specifications, limitations, or anything else you need to know. We're happy to clarify before an order.

Why V2 is different

Some people apparently remember spoofer.network V1. Yes, V1 was more open and displayed much more information publicly.

That system had a serious problem: lists were repeatedly leaked, redistributed and abused, which caused resources to become overloaded and ultimately affected legitimate customers.

That's one of the reasons V2 was redesigned.

V2 is intended to provide a more controlled system and reduce unnecessary leakage and abuse instead of simply publishing everything publicly for anyone to copy.

So yes — V2 is different from V1 by design.

About the $20 / $50 / $85 / $155 plans

Another comment says:

Quote:"this dude is charging you $20 $50 $85 and $155 for a list IP addresses and the ASN they use"

That's an inaccurate characterization of the product.

The different tiers exist because different resources have different performance, capacity and availability. You cannot reasonably compare a lower-priced tier with a higher-performance tier and then claim they're all simply the same list.

For example, the $85 tier is advertised around the higher-performance 10 Gbps / 10M PPS level. That level of infrastructure can be considerably more expensive when obtained independently, depending on the provider and actual specifications.

You can potentially spend €400–€800+ on infrastructure advertised around 10 Gbps and still discover that it doesn't meet your requirements. In that situation, the money is already gone.

The purpose of our service is to provide customers with a way to evaluate available resources/options without immediately committing hundreds of euros to infrastructure they haven't evaluated.

$85 versus potentially €400–€800+ is a completely different level of financial risk.

That's part of the value customers are paying for — not simply a text file.

About the “I already have a .txt” argument

If you already have a text file containing information you obtained elsewhere, that's completely fine.

But having a .txt file doesn't automatically mean you have the same thing as the service being offered.

A customer should compare the actual product, specifications, access, current availability and support rather than reducing everything to “IP + ASN = worthless.”

That's like saying a hosting company is selling “just an IP address” because an IP address is involved.

The context and service around the resource matter.

About the people piling on

CyberXero, Gigabot and everyone else are obviously free to have an opinion.

Legitimate criticism is completely fine.

If someone actually purchased the service and believes something wasn't delivered as advertised, post the specific issue or contact support with the order details and we'll review it.

But saying:

Quote:“what is this service lmao” while repeating an interpretation of the product that the original buyer himself admitted he didn't read properly isn't particularly useful.

If you didn't purchase the product and haven't actually used it, please don't present assumptions as firsthand experience.

Finally

We have Terms of Service and a Refund Policy available before purchase. Customers are expected to read them and understand what they're buying.

If there is a genuine order problem, contact us privately and we'll deal with it according to the applicable policies.

If you simply don't like the business model, that's your opinion and you're entitled to it.

But deliberately describing the product as "just an ASN and a list of IPs" when that isn't what the listing says is misleading.

Criticism = fine.

Questions = fine.

A legitimate complaint = fine.

Misrepresenting the product and turning the thread into sales trashing = not fine.

I'll report posts that cross that line rather than wasting everyone's time arguing.

For future buyers: read the listing first. If you have questions, ask before paying. It's really that simple.

You have no leg to stand on Jason. You had no contract. You don't seem to know ANY Hack Forums rules despite being an Uber.

Don't do deals without a contract and come in and harass a seller. Don't type in all lower case it's looks illiterate. And you have been typing all lower case in every post.

In addition you admitted to reading nothing about the product before buying?

Are you over 18?

Please read the Help Docs in full. Thank you. These are Omni's rules that he shares with all of us in the Help Docs. You need to read all of the Help Docs. You are supposed to use a HF contract and then you make a deal dispute citing and linking to your contract. The HF contract is what protects you from losing money.

Thanks, The Pact. I appreciate you taking the time to review the situation and explain the rules clearly.

Yes, that's exactly the point I was trying to make. The buyer should read the product information and the applicable rules before purchasing, and if there is a genuine dispute, it should be handled through the proper contract/dispute process rather than turning the sales thread into accusations and harassment.

I also appreciate you pointing out the issue regarding the lack of an HF contract. That makes the situation much clearer.

Good job handling it, and thank you for keeping the thread under control. ?

I'll follow the HF rules and keep any further discussion focused on the actual transaction rather than arguing with the members involved.

Much appreciated!

You asked what harassment? Harassing sellers in the market place on HF with no contract and no deal dispute thread. You were reported multiple times for sales trashing by other members.

You don't have the reading comprehension to understand that you were reported 20 times by other members, and you try to lie that you were given 20 warnings for one post when you have multiple posts deleted for all your sales trashing after engaging in trades with NO CONTRACT.

You don't have the reading comprehension of an 18 year old and your response to the rules in the Help Docs aren't as mature as that of a 16 year old. Did you borrow your big brother or big sister's account? This isn't a diss so much as a genuine possibility. I'm only asking your age because you are not allowed to be 17 here any more. The rules changed to exclude minors. You are saying you are on clear net, so you don't need a contract??? You cannot say that here.

You refuse to use capital letters and pretend not to understand that members make reports to staff.

You believe sales trashing, no contract, no deal dispute and illiteracy are fine on HF. No they aren't. Read the Help Docs.

You're still missing the point.

"This website is clearnet, so I don't need a contract" is completely irrelevant. You're on Hack Forums, not operating under your own private rulebook. HF has marketplace rules and procedures, and staff already explained them to you.

You said you don't want to make a deal dispute. Fine. Then don't expect the sales thread to become your personal dispute-resolution system.

You were told that there were multiple reports from other members, multiple warnings, and deleted posts involving sales trashing. Yet you're still trying to reduce everything to "I got warned for one post." That's not what The Pact explained.

And the account-creation argument is weak too. An account existing since 2015 doesn't prove the age of the person operating it at the time. Asking whether you're over 18 isn't the same thing as claiming you were seven years old.

The funniest part is that you're arguing about rules while openly saying you don't care about following the rules or using the procedures provided by the forum.

You don't have to like The Pact's decision. You don't have to like the Help Docs. But pretending they don't apply because you personally don't want to use them doesn't make them disappear.

Read the rules, follow the process, and stop turning the marketplace into a drama thread.

The system in place is that members HAVE to use contracts and that if they want to complain they have to make a deal dispute thread that leads back with a link here but my understanding of the new Help Documents is that sellers should be free to have their sales threads left alone but if there is a problem that's done separately from the sales threads.

If Jason wasn't Uber he would have had longer than a three day ban for his immature response to the rules and to myself.

I'm not going to allow him to continue to type in all lower case either. But refusing to use contracts is also a bankable offense.

Exactly, that makes sense.

The sales thread should stay focused on the actual product and service. If there's a genuine transaction issue, there's already a separate contract/deal-dispute process for that.

So there's really no reason to turn the sales thread into a dispute or sales-trashing thread.

Thanks for clarifying, The Pact. I'll keep my thread focused on the service and let the proper process handle any actual disputes.
