Thread: 22 MINUTES of PURE RAGE

oRequiem - April 29, 2026, 11:53 am

Within 2 weeks, I was able to get about 164 clips of people raging on Black Ops 7 against me already.

Hope you guys enjoy. I tried new rendering settings and youtube still compressed the hell out of my video, I really don't know how to get rid of visible pixels, but it is what it is.

Nice.

Do you have a Premium YT account? I think that's why you have low-compression.

Premium is only there to watch videos at a higher bitrate, but I be seeing people's gameplay that are crystal clear at 1080p. I'm probably gonna try rendering 1080p gameplay at 4k since that tricks youtube's system into giving me a better codec, I'm gonna have to do some testing on that.

EDIT: YouTube Premium wouldn't effect uploads, only by the viewer to see so it's client-sided.

Ah, I hardly use YT anymore.

Yeah, it is also known that people's videos that get into the algorithm (larger creators usually) do get a favorable bitrate amount.

It just sucks since it's like CRYSTAL CLEAR on my pc locally lol.

Rage videos are easy to get views on, but hard to monetize. Just bringing this up in case anyone is inspired to post this type of content. Several years ago YT started cracking down on these. I personally hosted some of YouTube's highest viewed rage videos for a period of time, over a decade ago. It was really fun seeing them demonetized after years of profits lol.

Sorry, tangent - Nice video montage.

That was for trolling specifically, but they pretty much let that go anyway. You basically just can't let too much cussing and any cussing within the first minute of the video. I've had Google AdSense issues that they haven't helped me on at all so I'm not monetized.

Does everyone do everything online now for monetizing?

Seems like nobody does anything for fun anymore.

Makes sense, that's worth considering. A lot of my videos had dicey thumbnails and also were quick to show off some highlights. I would do a mini montage in the beginning before breaking out into the larger segments.

One thing that was cool - I was able to win multiple DMCA takedowns with fair use claims. I frequently sourced videos from other channels, used segments, and never had a video removed (after temporarily being down until I responded).

All in the past now, the channel got completely wiped for some unrelated BS. I moved on from this niche

It started out for fun but over time I grew the channel to 100s of videos and millions of views. I never relied on it though, it was always just a fun hobby that also brought in some nice side cash.

At least it's not as bad on youtube like twitter, twitter is a whole different level of engagement farming ?

That 4 man by the tunnel around the 3 minute mark was insane playing peekaboo with them, I wish I had this many people calling me a cheater In video games lmao. Your movement is impressive as well, we need more of these maybe knife only to get more rage reactions? Well played mate good work watched the full 22 minutes keep making them rage.

Haha that is true can imagine it would take a while to get the footage. Either way mate keep it up got a nice channel going!

I've found that diversifying onto platforms like Rumble or even Discord servers can keep the rage content alive without the YouTube choke-holds. I also switched to "reaction-only" uploads where I overlay the footage with live commentary—no profanity in the first 10 seconds and the algorithm seems happier. Have any of you tried mixing in POV VR clips? The immersion tends to crank the anger factor up while still staying within fair-use boundaries.

Reminds me of 2014-2016 YouTube for some reason. Golden years in my opinion!
