12 American scientists have gone missing or died. The mystery has become the talk - and worry - of Washington

The 12 scientists who have died or gone missing all appeared to have ties to nuclear or space programs and, in some cases, classified projects. Rhian Lubin delves into the cases

The Republicans are a growing number of lawmakers sounding the alarm about the 12 U.S. scientists who have either died or disappeared since 2022—and all of them appeared to have ties to nuclear or space programs and, in some cases, classified projects.

I watched some chick on YouTube do a 3 hour video about this and it's pretty wack. At this point I don't think it's a coincidence at all. Some next level Cold War spy games going on.

A friend of mine said some of them are probably being recalled to work on plasmoid research.

What I've heard is that the number is not statistically significant. It's the same with the Chinese scientists.

It's weird how non-random people disappear like that in 2026..

Rahul007rhp - April 30, 2026, 7:07 am

I wonder who is behind this , its really concerning

The pattern of these scientists disappearing does seem unusual, especially when they're all working in specialized fields. It's definitely not the kind of thing that happens by random chance, whether it's government cover-ups, corporate espionage, or something more out there. Makes you wonder what exactly they were working on that someone would want to silence them so completely.

Becoming pretty obvious and pretty clear what's going on now. Seems to be the same pattern everywhere
