I mean, just being realistic here, but why would anyone give out an idea that they know makes money for free?

Copy stock trades that politicians make. There's a few sites that track all their trades.

I'm not really looking to buy a method and i think people can share what they are working with or have done in past which i can maybe try.

If your goal is a realistic extra $400–500/month consistently, I'd focus on something skill-based or service-based first instead of gambling on dropshipping or random crypto plays.

exactly, success depends on your skills, not a magic key. analyze your strengths, learn what's in demand, and offer concrete services instead of looking for easy fixes.

Trading with prop firms, reselling stuff, exchanging

I mean tbf with $2k you can start a good selection of things.

Best long term investment outside of just "buy stocks" is growing social pages.

With $2k, you can invest in a good chunk of content as well as ads to help speed up the growth of your pages.

And tbh you could even outsource.

Once SM pages start growing, they can take off pretty quickly if you are consistently posting good content.

You could probably start that with like $50 investment lmao and use the rest of your money on the good ole stock route.

try to invest in learning a skill so that you can translate that into consistent money
