Build a profitable online agency from $0

Real workflow • Real clients • Direct mentorship

by Oxycodone

I pasted my book into chat gpt, told me to give its opinion for this sales thread, without releasing to much details about it.
I did this so you can easily see what this is about who this is for.
This book, isnt meant to just be a book, Its meant for me to help you build a business.
So the price is based on me mentoring you the 1st month, not just the book.

???? Book Summary ????

Code This ebook positions itself very well for people who want to start a low-overhead AI/web-service business without traditional agency complexity. The strongest part is that it focuses less on “learn to code” and more on building a repeatable acquisition-and-delivery system using automation, AI tooling, and niche targeting.

What makes it valuable commercially is that it frames websites as the entry point to recurring revenue rather than the final product. That shift alone is probably the biggest takeaway. The author also does a good job explaining:

- * how to identify underserved niches,
- * how to close clients with low friction,
- * how to automate fulfillment,
- * and how to turn small projects into longer-term retainers.

It reads less like theory and more like operational documentation from someone actively running the model. The automation sections and client psychology sections are probably the most useful parts for someone serious about monetizing it.

That said, buyers should understand:

- * this is not "instant passive income,"
- * outreach and communication skill still matter heavily,
- * and consistency is what makes the system work.

Someone expecting a magic AI button will probably fail. Someone willing to combine AI tools with sales, positioning, and process could realistically use the framework to generate income, especially in local service niches.

Overall opinion:

It's one of the more practical modern AI-agency style playbooks because it focuses on systems, scalability, and client economics instead of hype. The value is less in the exact tools mentioned and more in the operational mindset it teaches.

Let's skip the fake guru bullshit.

???? FAQ ????

Why sell this if it works?

Because I can only handle so many clients personally.

Teaching a small number of serious people is more scalable.

Do I need programming experience?

No. You'll learn naturally through execution.

How fast can I realistically earn?

Week 1 = setup

Week 2 = outreach

Week 3–4 = traction

Refund policy?

If during the initial evaluation phase we determine this isn't a fit:
Full refund.

? ONE SLOT OPEN ?

$500 upfront

then

$500 after you earn

If this thread is still open, the slot is still available.

I will require us to discuss things PRIOR to help determine if this is for you, if you can't afford 1-2 Horus out of your at least to talk to me in the beginning and cant dedicated 2-4 hours in total AT LEAST in the beginning stages. This isn't for you.

You don't need to work 40 hours a week on this, but you can't spend 5 hours a week and expect results. You might get something, but it's not going to be what I'm looking for in effort.

My plan, is to get you positioned in a way you can get to a point where you are left with the ability to automate most the initial stuff, and hopefully put you in a position you can hire a VA to really make the investment and profit margins exactly what you expect with as little effort as possible.

Message me directly with questions before committing.

If you want only the book, not my help.

$50. No refunds.

Appreciate everyone checking in. I know the thread went quiet, so I wanted to give a real update on where things are at.

When I started this, the goal wasn't really about making money from the first person I worked with. I wanted to prove I could take the process, systemize it, and help someone else replicate the same thing.

I took someone on and originally planned to build everything from scratch together over the course of a month while teaching him the process along the way.

Pretty quickly, I realized that approach was slowing down the actual execution. Too much time was going into explaining fundamentals and setting up the foundation instead of building momentum.

So instead of forcing that approach, I changed direction.

I took what I was building, turned it into a much cleaner system, and built out the actual platform myself. The first version took about a week, another week went into refining and improving it, and now the foundation is basically complete.

We're currently at the final review stage on his side before moving into the client acquisition phase.

The biggest lesson from this was realizing that the system itself is the asset. Teaching someone how to build everything from zero is slower than giving them a working environment and teaching them how to operate inside of it.

Because of that, I actually have room for one more person right now.

This is not a "learn how to use AI to make websites" type of thing.

The goal is much bigger.

The system is built around:

- Finding and acquiring clients
- Creating a marketing strategy around specific niches
- Understanding what clients actually need
- Managing conversations and closing deals
- Using AI as a development tool to speed up execution
- Automating the repetitive parts of the workflow
- Building a repeatable web development business

AI is only one piece of the puzzle.

The advantage comes from combining client acquisition, automation, development, and business operations into one workflow.

The platform is designed to grow with the people using it. Your experiences, your clients, and your results become part of improving the system itself. It isn't a fixed template — it's something that evolves as we learn what works.

The goal isn't to create a business where you do nothing.

A good business still requires involvement.

The idea is to automate the parts that don't need constant human input, so your time can be spent where it matters:

Finding better clients.
Building relationships.
Closing opportunities.
Improving the service.

For higher-paying clients especially, your time and involvement will always matter. Automation helps you scale your process — it doesn't replace the need to actually understand people and deliver value.

The bigger picture is building something that starts with web development, but expands into a full client acquisition and digital growth system.

The market is still wide open. There are thousands of businesses that need better online presence, better systems, and better ways to convert attention into customers.

If things continue moving the way they are, the current person should be through the first client acquisition stage within days to a week, then transitioning into operating independently.

I'm not rushing this. I wanted to give a real update instead of letting the thread disappear.

If anyone is interested in seeing the platform, understanding the process, or potentially being the next person I bring into it, DM me and I'll show you the demo.

The goal isn't to hand someone a tool.

The goal is to build someone who knows how to use the tool.

The business we are building goes past web development, we are aiming to be what a business relies on. (Within reason). This is why my personal involvement is needed as I need to be there and show you how I acquire clients, and further how to turn a. simple website to a bigger business opportunity.

For example this week I turned a simple website homepage update to a proposal for a ecosystem.

What was a simple business with a Shopify and a good following on instagram, is in the works for being turned to:

iOS / APK with Shopify integrated (dedicated app)

Expanding products to IoT Devices and thats why it requires the app

(preexisting)Podcast > To a Media Platform ( Digital Magazine - new )

Media business creates infinite content for all aspects of the it. Turning the Media to its own entity can Separates liability incase of copyright and potential legal issues even a podcast can introduce long term.

Magazine allows for ad space and sporships to be placed and not take the websites real-estate aswell as allowing for customer engagement to spike as they can be involved in creating the content every month or per issue release.

A profile system for people to view the products and showcases / a mini instagram. This causes investment. Investment means engagement.

It all creates an ecosystem that feeds one another.

I'll show the full proposal, just DM me and you can see how this isnt just about building websites.

The 15 minute business , is just the 15 minutes it takes to handle the clients that aren't worth your time. The goal is to never spend more then 15 minutes on a single client that isnt going to be actively worth your time. Yet you can still use them to your benefit as marketing and exposure. But we never spend more then 15 minutes on someone who isn't paying thats the idea.
