Ironically my wife was telling me about this yesterday, lol. I'm still trying to figure out what this dude was doing driving around with a loaded shotgun in Nebraska.

What was he potentially looking to shoot? Corn fields?

Dont keep that round / shell chambered >.<

P.S TAKE A SHOWER BRO! :-P

Someone was extremely careless with that shotgun not to make certain that it was stored unloaded.

I don't even think it's legal to transport a firearm with ammunition.

Depends on the state, and sometimes the firearm. Laws vary unfortunately. In my state all firearms can be transported loaded in your vehicle as your vehicle is an extension of your home. An unloaded firearm is useless paperweight IMO.

The main thing in this case was the safety was t on, or is was so old it didn't have one. Who knows.

Hmm, seems statistically irrelevant and a waste of time & energy to discuss this, but I'll share that I chuckled. Thanks for flaming me on my science & tech related thread while you doomscroll meaningless content.

I didn't look for your thread btw, it was just the next one down from mine.

I hope the dog wasn't treated badly afterwards. I don't like how they blamed the dog. It was the woman who was extremely reckless. Someone could have died. I worry for the dog.
