

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Meta halts worker tracking for AI training due to privacy fears

ClintEastwood - June 23, 2026, 10:58 pm

Meta has paused a new company-wide program of tracking its employees' computer usage which has been plagued by internal frustration.

The program was started only two months ago as part of an effort by Meta to gather data on how people used computers, including mouse clicks and keystrokes, that could be used to train artificial intelligence (AI) models.

It was met immediately with upset from employees who were to have their every online action at work tracked and recorded, but also concerned about where the data was going and how it would be protected.

Meta halted the program on Monday after realising some of the collected data had been left potentially accessible to anyone inside the company.

A Meta spokesman confirmed to the BBC that the program, named internally the Model Capability Initiative (MCI), was "on pause for now" as the company investigates the issue.

full news here - <https://www.bbc.com/news/articles/cq615g3z36po>

Raijin - June 24, 2026, 1:57 pm

Yeah I heard about that program being in place. More privacy invasion from Meta.

one122 - July 10, 2026, 10:19 am

Zuckerberg strikes again, just gonna result in more invasion of privacy