Thread: Are you celebrating 4th of July?

Snowwy - July 2, 2026, 6:17 pm

I'm not from the US, so I'm not, but Happy 4th of July nonetheless. What are your plans for people who are celebrating it?

Going back and forth trying to decide between if I'll be purchasing fireworks and setting them off or going to an event and watching them. Might barbeque also.

Sounds like fun and very American! How good! Are fireworks cheap to buy over there?

Depends on quality. You can get some cheap ones but they aren't spectacular or anything. The ones you see in movies where mortars shells shoot into the sky and explode usually start around $50-$100 for a few, then you can get some big boxes of them for a few hundred that will have a amazing showing.

That's awesome. Good prices. I thought they would be way more expensive. They're illegal here, but lots of people still get them for NYE here.

There's quite a few states here that have them banned. You either have to go to a firework show and watch the event or drive to a legal state and purchase them. You can still get in trouble but I think it's just a small fine, I don't know anyone that's ever been in trouble over it.

I'm going to have friends and family over. I'm going to grill some Rib-Eye steaks.

My partner and I will be celebrating the holiday twice, on the 3rd and the 4th, because we have friends that want to do something and my partner's family want to do something as well.

Right - I understand. That's a smart way of doing it. Yeh we have them banned country wide.

Sounds like a great idea. Any fireworks or just watching them from others who let them off?

I just watch others shoot them off in the neighborhood. It's pretty good display and view from my backyard. I'd rather spend the money on steaks.

Not from the US, so I'm not celebrating it but it looks so cool to have a reason to gather the whole family during summer. We do it only during winter on Christmas and during spring for Easter.

Good idea. I'd probably be doing the same.
