

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: What is the most valuable thing you've learned from Hackforums?

Mastercarder - July 8, 2026, 6:15 am

What is the most valuable thing you've learned from Hackforums?

After nearly 1,000 posts on HF, I started thinking about something. A lot of us joined for different reasons:

- Making money ?
- Learning new skills ?
- Buying/selling services ?
- Making friends ?

Mine would have to be that I learned there are so many legitimate ways to make money online which I had no idea about! HF also taught me how much data about us is publicly available and why protecting your online footprint actually matters.

But one of the biggest things I've learned is the value of self-education. HF showed me that if you're genuinely curious and willing to research, you can teach yourself almost anything online.

Drop your answers below

revelating - July 9, 2026, 1:13 pm

(Jul 8, 2026 06:15 AM)Mastercarder Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) What is the most valuable thing you've learned from Hackforums?

After nearly 1,000 posts on HF, I started thinking about something. A lot of us joined for different reasons:

- Making money ?
- Learning new skills ?
- Buying/selling services ?
- Making friends ?

Mine would have to be that I learned there are so many legitimate ways to make money online which I had no idea about! HF also taught me how much data about us is publicly available and why protecting your online footprint actually matters.

But one of the biggest things I've learned is the value of self-education. HF showed me that if you're genuinely curious and willing to research, you can teach yourself almost anything online.

Drop your answers below

i agree w/ u, HF shows how anything is possible online