SoulZeh Showed their really neat tattoo they got recently and it gave me the idea of a simple tattoo thread.

? loading encrypted image... Always thought death was beautiful and interesting, your candle can burn bright or dim but at some point it will go out. That's not a bad thing, the light that was given off guided the way for those in need, and will not be forgotten.

Took three sessions of ~8 hours each, I didn't want it to drag on so I told him we can do as much as he's personally comfortable with and I'll just push through to get it over with in as little sessions possible. He did a great job with the colors. Was originally for a tattoo show so I got a crazy discount, but then we ended up not being able to go.

Whatcha guys got?

I have a few small tattoos, and they're all from different shops in different parts of the country.

That sounds awesome. Also, that little reflection on death really resonated with me. It actually reminds me of an old Mexican movie because of the life-and-candles analogy. :3

Personally, I don't have any tattoos, and I don't really have any interest in getting one myself. But I definitely enjoy admiring them. There are so many extravagant, intricate, beautiful, and often deeply meaningful designs.

That looks sick. Tbh I have none. I never really found anything worth tattooing on my body, have nothing against it at all. Just worried I might regret it later down the line lol

Got nothing right now, wanted to get my first on my birthday however by the looks of my current financial situation I'm gonna have to postpone it lol, a lot of unexpected things had to be dealt with.
