You trade your time and labour for currency.

Real talk, find something you're very good at and monetize it

Alternatively, you could work some crap Job and use the income from that to work towards doing something you are passionate about.

100000000%

Done that in my younger years. Couldn't agree more.

Think about things you wish you had to make various items easier, but don't and work towards bridging the gap. Another is to sharpen your skills, never stop learning and take a look at an item, project, etc. when you are knowledgeable enough and make the determination whether you can do it better. Determine how saturated these items are and if there's too many doing the same, then move on to the next. Don't waste time doing what hundreds of others are doing.

Start by learning a useful skill that people are willing to pay for, then look for entry-level work or offer your services online. There's no instant method, so focus on gaining experience and building a good reputation.
