Nice UI and seems to be a good software overall

About the recovery; Does it only recover from browsers? No recovery from email clients and other software?

Are there options for auto-tasks? (Including features like auto-recovery, auto-update, auto-upload & execute, auto-clear cookies, etc., with timing of how long to wait before the auto-tasks execute or order by which they do and if to execute on first connect or always.)

What are the file output extensions?

Any vouch?

Regarding the recovery feature, it's limited to browsers only, with support for up to 21 browsers.

The current version doesn't support task options yet, but we'll definitely be adding them in future updates in a more advanced and highly scalable way, along with other features.

Supported output formats are: EXE and DLL.

The tool has a lot of features and capabilities that weren't shown in the video. One of the most notable is the notification system for tracking agent activity. You set it up once and it runs automatically every time the agent connects.

The notification list is smart and well-optimized. Even if you have thousands of connections with activity detected on each one, there's a solid strategy in place that doesn't affect performance at all. The list stays clean and organized with no noise, filtering only the detected activities. Clicking on any activity takes you directly to the client, saving you the hassle of searching and comparing, and making management a lot faster. Analysis is handled on the tool's side, not the agent's, with zero impact on performance.

In the agent builder, you get a high level of customization. For example, you can build an agent that works purely as a communication channel for remote file execution, nothing more. And that will only cost you 35 kilobytes or even less if you use the bundling feature, which is built from scratch.

You can also fully isolate the configuration data so it's hosted rather than embedded, which lets you modify settings and configuration data remotely, along with other benefits.

We also offer clients the option to request full customization of the tool, whether that's a private build with specific modifications or a complete tailored version that fits their exact needs.

Thank you so much for your kind comment, we really appreciate it!

Good job on UI, looks solid and GLWS, might give it a try if you offer vouch or trial copies until full commitment just to test.
