Looks more like an advertisement than a request for advice.

For absolute privacy: BTCPay Server is technically superior because it is fully open-source and doesn't require a third-party single-point-of-failure. However, it is much harder to set up than PayXif.
For ease of use: BitPay or Coinbase Commerce are "better" because they are plug-and-play. You don't have to host anything. But, you trade away your privacy (KYC) and pay higher fees for that convenience.

For lowest charges: PayXif or BTCPay Server. Since you aren't paying a company to "rent" their software, you only pay the blockchain's transaction fee (gas).

I advice you to verify your email, look for a code or a link that you might've received. The website is clearly angry at you for not verifying it.
