Former and current Anthropic employees are now posting that they “earnestly believe AI could kill all humans.”

This company is expected to hit $2.5 trillion in market cap in its upcoming IPO.

What part of the cycle is this?

I still don't see this as being a reality. I mean barebones AI is just hardware and math. Could someone explain their thoughts on why we should be worried? The only worry I can think of is AI overtaking jobs.

This is nothing but a marketing stunt. Unless you assume that one day advanced robots are going to break their own code and have a desire to eliminate the human species... It's only advanced software, that we control.
