Tokens are how information and work is measured for AI. It's data: data in, data out. It's abstracted a bit if you go through a subscription, but if you go through an API it's something that's more obvious since you're paying significantly more and for every token you use, rather than paying an amount and having a time-gated allotment.

It's (supposedly) Claude that you'll access through an api url and secret key using Claude Code CLI or whatever else, but I dunno post is formatted the way it is and I'd like to see a CCTest.
