One of the first things I did while learning HTML was a small defacement. HTML handled the structure: logo, text, and audio. CSS managed the styling and animations. JavaScript triggered the audio to play when the page loaded and again upon clicking. The audio is actually Morse code. Looking back, I suppose it has a bit of a "hacktivism" vibe. It's the sort of thing that makes you wonder what would happen if you applied the same idea to a government website. The idea of being part of a hacktivism group always appealed to me.
