Thread: If you could retire tomorrow, how would you spend your days?

Yanix - October 13, 2026, 5:18 am

If I could retire tomorrow and money wasn't something I had to worry about anymore, I'd probably spend most of my time with my wife and kids.

I've always wanted to buy a big piece of land where I could build a house for each of my family members. We'd all have our own homes and privacy, but we'd still be close enough to visit each other whenever we wanted. It would also be nice to have a swimming pool, a playground for the kids and a place where everyone could get together for meals or just hang out.

I'd love to wake up every morning without having to rush anywhere, spend time with my kids, do a bit of gardening and just enjoy whatever the day brings.

I guess after spending so many years working hard, being able to slow down and enjoy life with my family would be more than enough for me.

Buy a house in some nice country and spend the days with my wife working out, having fun, making memories.

That sounds like a wonderful retirement plan, brotha! Enjoying life with your wife, staying healthy and making beautiful memories together. Have you already got a particular country in mind where you'd like to settle down?

Not yet to be honest, Croatia looks promising though.

Definitely buy a house to have a base, and then start travelling and probably never return to that house lol

That's actually a great plan brother, having a house to call home while traveling the world sounds like a dream. Just don't forget where you parked your house keys!?

Seems like a good plan.

Ideally I'd own a house and land that's surrounded by a forest with ponds. A save haven I can always come back to when I'm not travelling. :)

That sounds like a dream place to live.

Having your own peaceful home surrounded by nature, away from all the noise and stress, would be amazing. Especially knowing you have somewhere beautiful to return to after traveling!

It truly is, as someone who lives there on the coast. However for a regular person getting by here is very hard especially if you rent in an area where tourists frequently come

If I could retire maybe I could actually build my gunpla!

If I could retire tomorrow and money wasn't a problem, I would probably keep things relatively the same as they are now. I'm one of those oddballs that enjoys their job and the people they work with. While I admit to enjoying a day off from work, such as today, I couldn't do it long-term without experiencing profound boredom. But I most certainly would take more time to travel, especially to tornado alley in May-July during tornado season. As well, I'd invest in a much more powerful telescope to gaze at the stars at night. Provided we're in a relatively rural enough area, of course.

I would probably retire and then just get into tech for things that I actually enjoy like creating new automation or try to solve a problem some companies have. It would still be work but at least have more purpose and I could control my own time

Sounds like a great plan.

I would spend my days taking care of the dogs, but I would move to the middle of the woods to bumfucknowhere.

And I mean no neighbours at least in 10km radius. I would be prepared to pay good to get a fast internet and then just live the rest of my days as a hermit.

Maybe at max invite one human being to my cottage once a year. Or go visit a friend once a year. I dunno.

I would love to be as self sufficient as possible, which is actually doable here where I live even though we have more days below zero than over.

Working on projects. A lot of my projects that I launch I do for no money. Some of them have been picking up traction lately such as VegaStream. I have been getting more downloads and helping people who are running into issues.

I do eventually plan to monetize some of them, but most of them I don't want anything in return. I just enjoy the challenge.

I'd spend it traveling to be honest.
