First off, your grammar is despicable, i can barely understand you.

Second off, U.S.A considers EVERYTHING to be under their jurisdiction, they sometimes find it hard to accept that Canada is not part of the U.S.A too.

Good luck not getting caught.

First off, in hacking there is no 'almost', there is 'you did', or 'you didn't'. The picture proves nothing; I call bullshit. Now anyone can go to here:

Code <https://consumer.gov/>And get the same message...

i'd say replacing their main web page with the server default web page is pretty good....

unless you can do better, deface them, lets see how you do it.

iampoor - September 24, 2010, 10:03 am

Start using a proxy/vpn from now, it isn't too late if you can gain root access and delete the logs.

am i safe? i could leave my home for about 6 months and dissapere for that time (no credit cards will be used, no anything, i will just dissaprear without a trace...)

is tha something i should consider?

Also, early this morning, i saw a ghost van infront of my house, but noone ot out or anything, or is it just my imagination?

You haven't defaced or edited any files, have you? Just log out. They most probably won't read their logs and if they do they'll only probably change their passwords and fix the security hole.

Your too paranoid. ?

You should have defaced it though, anyway I don't think you would get arrested or anything. They'll probably just change the admin password and/or block you by MAC or IP address from their site.

When's the last time I hacked a .gov site?

Two weeks ago with 3 members of Team Poison..

Excuse me for not posting This

' ZOMG I JUST OWNT A FUCKING SITE. '

' IT'S MY FIRST DEFACE '

The people on this site that are legit, don't actually admit to anything. They hint at it, but never SAY it. Such as ' I have "x" amount of Boats on my Boatnet ' <- Referring to their Bots. or ' I have caught "x" amount of Rats in a trap ' <- referring to their Vic's EDIT. Not to mention some VPS Companies PROVIDE YOU WITH THE ABILITY to buy a .gov domain. So fuck off, again.

lyle45 - September 24, 2010, 11:57 am this has 2 sides...

the completely goddess side for hacking to gov site without fear... which is really impressive... and the more important side the stupid side of it all...

"Hero's Die First" this sentence comes into play here...

this is an irresponsible act... maybe if you hid under a few protections...

but bragging the stupidity is even foolish...

either way, i wish you luck in everything you do...

iPwnage - September 24, 2010, 12:01 pm

Anyway dude, calm down lol. You made the home page of a not that famous (i personally never heard of that .gov site before) website redirect to it's server auth. one. Then you didn't really do anything to fbi, white house, nor cia. As you said it requires trusted connection. I doubt feds would even get involved, probably the login credentials of consumer.gov would be changed as i stated earlier.

This thread has fail and fake all over the place.
Give me a break, are you people really falling for this?

You are seeing the Plesk panel for a completely different reason, he has not hacked shit.
It is because the SSL is deprecated (this skid has nothing to do with that.)
Thus the when using HTTPS you will get the Plesk admin login.

The real site is here: <http://consumer.gov/ncpw/>
