Bolt - November 26, 2010, 10:17 am

I think the coupon codes works only once per account. You can do something with that anyways.

I am very interested about buying domain.

But i am not sure is this legal?

Because $1.95 is too cheap for domain.

Godaddy sometimes do the same thing. The whole point of it is so they earn new customers that will extend the domain after its expired with them or buy new ones.

What I don't like in Netfirms is, calling them to confirm the order. That sucks, I can't do it.

Uncle Drew - November 27, 2010, 3:17 am

NP guys.

You can email them stating your problem. Just say, the costs for calling them would be too much. I said that and it worked. It's because I'm from another country and it'll cost too much too call, I just emailed them and they said just to provide an ID or such.

mistatic - November 27, 2010, 4:50 pm

Weird, you guys had to confirm an order? I don't think I did and my site works perfectly O.o

Yep. I think it's only for those who payed via CC.

Exactly. But what if I don't have the documents they asking for?

If you had a CC attached to your paypal, they'd require you. So yeah, I guess they'll require you to submit some documents for the order.

Anyways, just tell them you're a student so you can only submit a school ID or a proof of billing, like a water bill or something.

Yeah. Thanks for your kind suggestion mate. But still it is pain in ass. Ain't it?

Uncle Drew - November 27, 2010, 11:32 pm

LOL. I guess so. Didn't bother me so much though. That time I bought a domain, I already had my ID scanned, so I used that. Anyways, use the promo code before monday!

Sithis - November 28, 2010, 12:01 am

I bought my favorite domain from there 2 weeks ago and I had to go out for a wedding party. I was off for a week. They canceled my order. I lost my domain somebody else bought it. :| It won't happen if they do not ask for additional shits. That's the reason I consider it pain in ass.

Uncle Drew - November 28, 2010, 12:24 am

Sucks for you man. Did they give you a refund on that?
