Thread: Lets talk about "Lifetime" licenses for products here.

Orgy - December 11, 2010, 6:51 am

Lately there seems to be a lot of controversy regarding being scammed over not receiving a lifetime use of a product.

People seem to think that because they buy a product for "lifetime" that they should get it until they die. Lets look at the definition for "lifetime"

[img]http://img89.imageshack.us/img89/7979/ss20101212094227.png[/img]

You may have noticed it doesn't say, "the time that the life of someone continues." It adds the, "or something," meaning that unless the owner specifies your lifetime or human lifetime, then obviously he or she means the lifetime of the product. I realize that some of you are too stupid to understand this and are probably scratching your heads thinking, "Yeah but I only got to use it for a month! Thats not a lifetime. BRB I'm going to go chargeback!"

So for you idiots, I'll use a nice little simile. Buying lifetime is like gambling. You might get the product for 10 seconds, or you might get it for 10 years. (More likely the former.)

By charging back against these users, you're becoming a scammer.
"LOLWAT? NO HE SCAMMED ME< IDIOT!"

Okay guy that uses the shift button to type in all caps instead of the caps lock, let me explain. You got to use the product, and even got what was promised, but that's beside the point. You got to use the product, and then you want your money back, too? All of it? Meaning you get to use it for free the entire time that you used it? Bullfuckingshit. You're an idiot.

Other smart people, feel free to comment. Idiots, feel free to flame.

Infallible - December 11, 2010, 6:53 am

People need to understand this. You won't get a refund lifetime does not mean your lifetime.

Rowdy - December 11, 2010, 6:54 am

I've never charged back on anyone that I paid for lifetime products, because I know they might come back at any time, like twBooter and twBooter web edition :).

Exactly. I'm sick of trying to explain this to dumbasses. So instead, I thought I'd take this opportunity to troll WHILE delivering information to the masses.

Speaking of which, did you get the email for your login on twBooter web? :)

N00B3R - December 11, 2010, 6:55 am

So if I for example sell you a webbooter that has a $ 50 value now, then after you get all the details you need to login delete the entire website; you won't chargeback?

Kondry - December 11, 2010, 6:56 am

Dude, Orgy, you will never get all of HF to understand this. You know I always have, from your threads, but the stupidity of kids on this forum is amazing. How can they expect a shell booter to last until they die?

That's not really the end of a product lifetime though is it? More of the creator murdering it.

I actually don't think I've ever charged back for anything, and no, I wouldn't. You make it seem like these users are trying to just take your money and leave. You do realize by shutting down their product, they aren't making money anymore either, right?

Rowdy - December 11, 2010, 7:06 am

Gooples - December 11, 2010, 7:12 am

People need to understand this, you don't expect e.g a booter until you die.

TheAJMxD - December 11, 2010, 7:16 am

yes this is a very true post and should clear some things up xD

Bos™ - December 11, 2010, 7:54 am

Life time means the life of the product. If the seller keeps selling the product but without any reason he delete your license, this is scamming but if the selling/updating of the product ends he has not scammed you.

So in other words, if the product doesnt work for every one, its ok.

lingling - December 11, 2010, 8:12 am

I completely agree with the "lifetime" statement.. Anyone who's expecting these "leet" "products" to last for more then a few months at most are idiots.. Although I'm not sure spelling it out for them will help at all.

(Dec 11, 2010 07:54 AM)Michael Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I've never charged back on anyone that I paid for lifetime products, because I know they might come back at any time, like twBooter and twBooter web edition :).

Sure sometimes products do come back..

However... One thing I've noticed in the market place.. Seeing users have to pay for a "v2" or a re-released or "upgraded" version of a product they paid a "lifetime" license for.. I don't think its fair that "coders" may be able to simply end a project for any reason then release a similar project with a different name (possibly other changes) for more after without offering upgrades.

True, but they made (easy) money and we lost money.

I know that they didn't want to shut down the booters but then you can refund a part of the money to the people that just bought it? It seems more fair if they do it like that. Some booters had 3 packages:

1. 1 month access + most updates (cheap)
2. 1 month access + all updates (more expensive)
3. Lifetime access + all updates (most expensive)

I bought the lifetime as it seems the best package, I could instead also have bought the 1 month and save like 10 $ more or less. It's a good lesson for me and others to always buy the lowest package to make sure you don't get backstabbed in the future.

Thats the gamble you take when you buy lifetime. Next time buy a month.

New World Order - December 11, 2010, 9:24 am

True

If its month to month you can get lucky

If it lifetime you might save money or lose it compared to paying for month to month.

But i wouldnt hurt just to put life time of the product in sales topic so people wont get confused?

Why can't it? Some products have short lifespans. Regardless, whatever you're referring to probably lasted a lot longer than that, you just unluckily caught it when its time was short.

i'm sure if you pay extra money on a shell booter for it to be life-time and you expect atleast a year out of the booter or some shit due to the term life-time..nobody actually believes it will be there till it's dead thats just you trying to make people look stupid.If you paid for life-time i believe you should get a lot more out of the booter then a month,and my post is aiming at phenom booter.

phenom booter promised an update of bot rotation for over 2 weeks, (never happend) phenom booter gets ddos'd by another booter for like 4 days? ...what booter?

asus gets arrested and will not be returning to Hackforums which is orgy's word.

idk but this sounds fishy to me...yet as orgy being insecure for his ass puppet he decides to flame me and ignore my logic

Your logic is invalid. You can't seem to understand what lifetime means.

you can't comprehend my idea of life-time ,just because you think the life of the product is life-time doesn't mean thats what it is/thats what people think it is.When people purchase lifetime it's like you expect it to be up for a while not less then the 1 month purchase.

if a booter goes down in like 2-3 months and you paid for life-time you should only have to pay for the 2-3 months not the extra fee for life-time when it's not even life-time.

Arruke - December 11, 2010, 11:03 am

Yep, that's why people shouldn't buy a product that's been out for a while, even if you buy the "lifetime" edition, the program can still be terminated by the creator.

Lets take a booter for instance, you can buy the login (because that's basically what you're buying) and it can remain valid for as long as the booter is alive and still has support. When that product has outlived it's usefulness (ie: the owner can't make anymore money from it, and it'll end up costing them more to keep it going) they will terminate it.

Great post orgy, but the only bad thing I think about the whole "lifetime" use thing is that when the product is about to be terminated, the owner should contact the clients saying that service will be ending shortly so they get a heads up. Plus, although most people should understand how the term is used, it still can be misleading because most people will not understand that it is the product lifetime. This is why the creator of the program when selling it should state that the lifetime use edition is for the lifetime of the product, then there won't be any discrepancy over the whole lifetime thing because you clearly stated what it entailed.

Scincid - December 11, 2010, 11:04 am

Just like life time hosting, exactly the same thing, yet every one thinks life time hosting is a scam. See where I'm going with this? Regardless of what it means, it's a shady term. Take offshore for example, offshore could mean a million things, I could offer hosting anywhere in the world and it could be offshore technically. People should really use common sense when buying something, all it would take is a simple question to see what lifetime means in their perception. I don't really recommend buying any kind of service lifetime. What if you bought lifetime "Spreading" and that meant when ever you continued to spread. So technically the person could stop spreading at any time and it could still be valid, since lifetime means till the object continues. Would that be considered scamming if the person stopped 1 minute later? It would more be like horrible business practice.

IE: I think lifetime products is a bad idea. I wouldn't buy anything lifetime.

You said in the other post you've made but that got closed that I was telling that I would scam which I won't. I never said such thing and if it seems like I said that in the thread you are just interpreting it wrong.

Charging back for a product that didn't come complete (E.G Lifetime isn't just 2 days you know...) is what PayPal has made the function charging back for.

If you don't like that opinion, deal with it.

I also see that you got Refucked (from which I think you deserve it) and that your last reps aren't that positive so do something about your image here on HF.

Lifetime IS 2 days if thats how long the subject in question lives. If you can't understand that, then you're an idiot.

My last reps seem positive to me, since they're green. I don't need to change my image. Users dislike me because I speak my mind and tell the truth. I don't sugar coat anything, I don't tell people they're smart when they aren't. People will never learn if we don't say what we mean.

Anyone afraid to actually say what they mean, especially on an internet forum, needs to nut the fuck up.

N00B3R - December 13, 2010, 7:05 am

You defined lifetime at the start of this topic; I found another definition.

Where you are talking about the lifetime of a product, there is also the lifetime of an individual. In other words the buyer or the seller.

Of course I understand that a programmer/seller can't maintain a program his entire life but he will have to strive towards this. After 2 days closing after selling something you can not call this "striving". This is called making profit and run away afterwards.

I will quote: Quote:Continuing for a lifetime; lifelong.

[img]http://img403.imageshack.us/img403/7294/lifetimev.png[/img]

That is the second definition for lifetime.

Further on I would like to bring out an example: Microsoft.

Microsoft also sells software with lifetime guarantees. I know Microsoft is a big corporation but that is not the point. It is about how they define lifetime also. Lifetime is for Microsoft Windows XP for example 2002 (Release) - 2010 (Support ending). That is like 8 years in between. Here I get as said before only 2 days. See the difference?

Orgy - December 13, 2010, 7:09 am

Alot ppl thinks lifetime is like 2 years. I've never seen a booter last so long/ a product of some sort. And usually sellers that offer lifetime, their products dies within a month or so.

xvisceral - December 13, 2010, 12:40 pm

I do think that there should be at least a minimum time for "lifetime"

(Dec 13, 2010 01:40 PM)xvisceral Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I do think that there should be at least a minimum time for "lifetime"

That's the best solution to this at the moment. It is a little unfair if you buy a product for lifetime and it is stopped after say 2days of you buying it. But I also do get the seller's point of view here so best make it recurring monthly payments for a lifetime or a full one-time payment.

Ex:

If the lifetime of the product costs 120$, make it say 10$/month or sell it at a discount of 20$ at a one-time fee of 100$.

HendR - December 13, 2010, 12:52 pm

There should be at least a minimum to assure the buyer, how about if they pay $50 lifetime and the program last one week.

Then that's the risk they take. I bet they didnt ask for a lower, monthly rate, did they?

xvisceral - December 13, 2010, 1:00 pm

What I meant is: Say you buy $50 for lifetime, they should have an assurance (that they can set) that you will have the product for X days or your money back.

2drop - December 13, 2010, 1:06 pm

If I buy a lifetime licence for £100 and the product stops working the next day and the coder decides to stop the project then it can be regarded as a scam in anyones book.

Lifetime keys for other products such as Kaspersky will last a lifetime, they may become outdated but they will still work for the pupose they were designed for.

In my opinion lifetime licences should just be banned from this site as the majority of them are not good value and are simply made for greedy sellers (may be some exceptions).

Orgy - December 13, 2010, 1:07 pm

Or at least X% of your money back. Yeah I see what you mean. Not a bad idea.

Yeah that would be ideal. Mabye make them the pricing equalivient of 12 months and refund the relevent amount.

Purchace for $60.

Stops after 2 months you would recieve a refund of $50, or mabye a month less so $45.

Exactly. Haha, Thanks for explaining this.

Your correct but say if someone is charging $5 for a month and $15 for a life time and suddenly the product goes down after 1 month, the lifetime buyers would ofcourse be pissed and if it was me id chargeback too because the product author is basicaly scamming.

hxkd - March 1, 2011, 12:29 pm

Yeah, lifetime of the product, I do agree, however you'd be pist if you spent $50 on lifetime and you only got to use it a week, when you friend spent $15 for three months and he still got to use it for three months.

Enough of your false logic PHD. Orgy posted an screenshot of the definition, and if you think it's edited with a Javascript/Firebug, then you are out of your mind. Logic and thoughts are two different things. This is logic, therefore you can't comprehend with what it states.

Jelly - March 13, 2011, 8:03 am

Though I believe your are correct when regarding an undefined lifespan of a product, I do however believe that if a seller states a definite license or lifespan such as 6 months then I believe a buyer has the right to whatever per cent of his money back based on how inaccurate the lifespan was.

For instance if someone is selling a shell booter program with 6 months access to it for $30 and the program goes down after 3 months, I believe the buyer should be entitled to 50% of their money back.

Yin Yang - March 15, 2011, 12:48 pm

So, I guess it's better to just put lifetime on every product then.

Depends on how long you are planning to keep it UP.

If you think that your booter will not last a month, just put lifetime on it to increase sales.

Though if you think it will run for a year, make one month packages to profit more from sketchy people.

This is absolutely true Orgy, Yet a lifetime membership SHOULD by all means last longer than a monthly membership. It's quite senseless for a product to be around less than a month or right on it, and charge two different prices for such time frame.

I like your explanation very much!

prometheus. - April 8, 2011, 4:49 pm

But yes, this is a very good point. Nicely explained. This is true for the definition that the sellers state. However on the terms of whether or not such an action is justified? I believe this is debatable. If one were to purchase the most expensive option
Eg. Lifetime, and only get a few days out of it. I would say this IS a scam. Especially if they have cheaper options which promise longer update times.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but I don't see the average tool (Program, etc, call it what you may) just 'dying' over night. The seller should have a good idea of where their product is heading. If they don't, then we can all assume they don't give a shit. If that is the case would it not be reasonable, on behalf of his/her customers to state such?

Now if a seller knew his product and was doing his job to offer a quality service he would see whether or not his product is going downhill, straight lining etc. Obvious signs would show themselves to the developer, there is no doubt about that. He is the DEVELOPER, is it not safe to assume he knows how the coding in the tool works? aka he/her should be able to see when his product is failing/ being detected.

Now this is not at all unreasonable judgements in my opinion. Seeing as they usually all have huge lists of vouches to display their 'legitiness'.

Straight to the point. The seller of the product (Should be in good contact with the developer if he/she is not the devoloper) is therefore continuing sales with prior knowledge to their products faults, right?

I would draw my conclusion right there that this would qualify for a scam. For it is being dishonest. I'm sure I don't need to link a picture of a definition for the word dishonest...

But lets have a look at the definition for a scam.

Spoiler (Click to View)

[img]http://iforce.co.nz/i/tya3pygs.snb.png[/img]

I would like the members of HF to be aware of this. I believe if a seller is truly committed, such information would be included. They would communicate with not only their customers, but their potential customers too. I believe that someone who has paid a full price for a product that is dropped within a short amount of time of purchase is fully justified for a refund.

Whether or not an ENTIRE refund is acceptable, is another debate.

However unless the seller has communicated clearly that he does not give a shit about the product and that there is a chance that it will be dropped over night, then I think ANYONE is entitled to a chargeback.

Yes my argument applies to a given context. I am aware that not all sellers are bad. I am also aware that some customers are, well, 'kids' and just grind people's gears. Just my opinion, no need to accept it. Sellers... Communicate more to have less problems.

Booter X

Weekly Sub: $20

Lifetime Sub: $80

Booter X lasts 7 days.

Buyer A buys Weekly sub. - Can't chargeback, booter lasted the time that he has paid for.

Buyer B buys Lifetime sub - Can and should chargeback, booter lasted the same time as a cheaper subscription.

That's just my 2 cents though.

You're the idiot mate. Explain to me how he got what he paid for when he could of paid a substantially lower price for EXACTLY the same time period of said product.

If the product had of lasted 8 days then he shouldn't charge back considering it lasted longer than the week subscription which costs less.

Sorry that you think it's fine for people to scam others out of money with lifetime subscriptions that last as long as a cheaper subscription. Just goes to show how money hungry people are these days.

So you're saying if I were to go and make a booter right now, sell weekly subs at $20 a pop and lifetime subs at $70 a pop, after a week when I shutdown my booter and refuse to update it, the people who bought lifetime have zero rights to reverse?

Lol cool, I just found a get rich quick scheme then.

If not then you should read this thread and facepalm

Suit® - May 28, 2011, 9:22 am

In other words. If a seller defines his "Lifetime period" as the definition supplied here with no further elaboration, He does not give a shit and you should avoid buying from him at all costs. (Unless you really want a chance of a bad deal)

And just to add to this discussion. When I see "Lifetime" I expect it to last no more than 2 months.

Only product that has truly delivered Lifetime updates/Updating HWID is BlackShades RAT.

PhirewireNET - May 31, 2011, 8:59 am

People also need to realize, when buying a new product they are taking a risk. If you see a booter in the marketplace with no views and no replies theirs no guarantee. Go for something from someone reliable or one thats been for sale for a while, odds are it will last and work longer.

binahu - July 1, 2011, 8:30 am

Well doesn't this just encourage everyone to make a project, mass-sell it. Then close it after a week and make project v2. I understand your point, but in my opinion.. People are raging because the developers just make v2, stop updating v1 (and probably just copy v1 source and add to it for v2) and make everyone spend more money. Within 1-2 weeks for a good $20-$50 per customer that complies.

Dr.SLiM - July 1, 2011, 8:48 am

The words "forever" and "lifetime" should be banned in the Marketplace.

Fishing™ - July 1, 2011, 10:21 am

Grants - July 10, 2011, 10:58 am lifetime isn't life of coder or of someone who purchased, its the life of software. Every "hacking" software can get fixed, i mean the bug it does can be fixed, and then whats the use of your lifetime? For what i sell, lifetime licence, will stay as long as the youtube allows botting.

I agree , but still, I think every seller needs to Accept some HF Market Rules before selling a product.

Why?

Well , lets see..

This is a quote from TOS of a product.

Quote:Lifetime means life time of the product, this means i shall close the product when i feel like it, charging back after this will result in a scam report and report to the authority's

Or another one:

Quote:The License can be lifted for any reason without a refund.

So , lets see.. this means i shall close the product when i feel like it,, doesnt really sounds product lifetime .. I can buy the product today, and tomorrow, the seller could close it because he dosnet give a fuck about customers... And still, if I charge back , I will be the one who gets a scam report? wtf .. lets be serious...
