zer0day's File Unlocking Suite will enable you to gain access to password protected RAR's, ZIP's, PDF's and Microsoft Office Files, and also remove restrictions. zer0day's File Unlocking Suite comes in two editions. You can either choose the installer version or the USB edition which can be ran from the convenience of your flashdrive. All applications included in the suite have been screened for cleanliness and have been packaged with VMware ThinApp.

Applications Included in Suite:

Buzus is a common false positive for portable softwares, some lesser A.V.'s don't have the capability of unpacking the executable to scan it so they label it with a generic detection.

Requirements:

1. Post here that you want
2. PM with your request of Installer Edition or USB Edition, do not PM me for individual tools
3. Post count of > 50 Posts
4. Failing to meet any of the three requirements will result in not getting the link

It looks very impressive mate. It seems you worked hard on this project and all the tools look very interesting. By the way, for people who think that there is a Virus, don't worry, it's only Falses-Positives (not a real virus) so don't worry about that.

Will download this tool soon. Thank you.

-mothered- - December 19, 2010, 1:25 am

Well, an excellent AIO compilation Indeed mate.

Now I'm assuming that a password list, will need to be added to each tool for proper functionality. That's not a problem, I do have quite a comprehensive list of good combinations.

Many thanks.

Thanks, as for Dictionary attacks yes you will need to supply your own wordlists. Some wordlists can be found within the forums if anybody needs any. ?

zer0day - December 25, 2010, 4:11 pm

Everyone is PM'd all caught up, thanks for the support.

?pti? - December 25, 2010, 6:38 pm

I'm curious, does this solely brute force the passwords or does it use a far more complex method such as applying a patch to the file to either bypass the command that starts the password checking process; or removes it altogether.

EDIT: If you are keeping the methodologies secret then I understand that you do not want it to be patched.

zer0day - December 25, 2010, 7:08 pm

Majority of them use bruteforce or dictionary attack methods. Some of them use special methods like the office and PDF recovery, and also PDF unlocker. For exact details of the methods used google for the corresponding applications website.

?pti? - December 25, 2010, 7:34 pm

After a quick google (still going as i type) I deduced you're either using the premade programs for the special methods (trying not to reinvent the wheel) and running them hidden (which i doubt) or using methods like this which i find more likely.

If so I'm intrigued as to how you managed to code it but that's part of the fun. Well done!

Actually they are bruteforce and dictionary attacks. And bruteforce has a 100% recovery rate, it just matters how much time you have.

ill take it please and thanks look VERY useful p0iz0ner - January 8, 2011, 1:08 am well. few arguments on this with sorry. Rar password file is encrypted with the password so if somehow you bypass the mechanism then still you need password to decrypt the inner files and many or can say even all password breakers can take even days to recover the password. So I need to ask, for strong password will it take much time to decrypt or it just do it within the blink second of an eye.

Bruteforce always takes time and can be time consuming on strong passwords, but the recovery rate is 100%. Dictionary attacks are only as good as your word lists. And the recovery times are also directly effected by the hardware you are using. If your looking for the big red button program that says crack me instantly, then this is not the program for you. I think you answered your own question "strong password will it take much time to decrypt" will of course it will take a long time to crack. If it didn't take a long to crack it wouldn't be a "strong" password now would it. ?

looks good.I would love to have a copy of the installer pata - January 25, 2011, 9:37 am

this is soo infected, no way, no how would diffrent tools from diffrent developers have the SAME detection. Even if they were false positives, they wouldnt be the same for each tool. Then he offers up only a screenshot from a VERY WEAK AV avast for the bottom tools.

Here is a scan of RARPassword Recovery Magic from cNet 0/42 NOT INFECTED:

VT Scan

If he claims its the installed EXE detected here is that scan 7/42 False Positive:

Exe VT Scan

I would also bet the hashes and file sizes dont match too.

Someone post up what he sent you and I will show you more proof its infected..

LOLZ @ HF staff and community for not protecting its members against this obvious shit. Also just look thru this section, is riddled with infected releases and PPC downloads. This is why HF is what it is.

You suck at making fake scans ass hole. No reason you have a negative REP. And how can you scan them when I never sent you the file, you have to PM me to get it. Each program was packaged with VMware Thinapp which will give a program a false positive of Buzus!. The scans you supply without even having the programs don't even have matching MD5's. And with over a hundred responses and no complaints.

pata - January 25, 2011, 10:42 am

Lol fake scans?

That was a comparison of the scans YOU put up to the scans of the REAL software i downloaded from the developer.

It shows that those are what the scans SHOULD look like, they do not match your posted scans.

I'll make it simple your scan "NOT =" to Scan of legit software

MD5 hash not matching = file has been modified

Go ahead someone check the MD5 from the download available on the developers website and the MD5 from what this guy is releasing.

I know what im talking about, im not fail skid like you.

Someone that's asked for the software here, PM me a copy and I will show you everything. This is infected and he used VB to make a pointless GUI for multiple software he didn't create.

Oh yea yer a l33t VB programmer, U can make a GUI that uses PUBLIC software to actually do anything, then I will release it like I really coded something and watch all the skids rep me. lol ur a fail.

YOUR MORE FAIL BECAUSE THE DEFINITIONS WOULD SHOW DIFFERENT DETECTIONS FOR EACH INDIVIDUAL SOFTWARE. Meaning each tool would have a different False-Positive detection.

I POSTED A SCAN OF THE LEGIT SOFTWARE DOWNLOADED FROM THE DEVELOPER, SO PEOPLE COULD SEE IT IS NOT THE SAME AS YOU POSTED!

FIRST SCAN IS THE INSTALLER FROM THE DEVELOPER

SECOND SCAN IS THE INSTALLED EXE FROM THE DEVELOPER

THEY DONT MATCH YOUR SCAN OR THE MD5

THAT MEANS THEY ARE MODIFIED AND MOST LIKELY INFECTED

SO I DONT NEED TO SEE YOUR SOFTWARE

YOUR A SKID AND THOUGHT "If i dont post it to the board or send it to any smart users, noone will know im infecting HF"

WHY DONT YOU SEND IT TO ME? I will confirm same MD5 from screenshot and then analyze it.

Also have some people here post the MD5 of what you sent them.

geded12 - January 25, 2011, 10:45 am

I would like to give this a try, hope to get the download link, and oh yea i would like the USB Edition :D!

LMAO, ?? of course downloading the ones from the developers wont have the same MD5 hashes, these ones are packaged with VMware Thinapp each and individually retard. These are virtualized apps of the originals. I would continue to make fun of you but it seems you don't understand how retarded you look right now.

Show how much you know, not VB, lol

I think everyone understands that when you use VMware Thinapp you take an application (the original from the developer) and you turn it into a virtualized app. The composition changes which in turn changes the MD5 hash. pata is all freaking out cause the MD5's of my programs don't match that of the developers program. Well of course they are not going to match the apps have been virtualized. And just about every app known to man that is made with VMware thinapp no matter if it scans clean or not will throw up a false positive for Buzus!. It is due to the way VMware packages the final executable.

pata - January 25, 2011, 10:56 am

Ok well send it to me, then ill show you.

Lets not argue its a waste of time, ill show proofs.

Then ill ask a few members for the MD5 of what you sent them and compare to make sure its the same..

Again, why did you make a software that uses software you didn't code? Why not make a thread and post the links to the softwares? That way people didn't have to download your crappy VB "zer0day's Fail File Launcher Suite" and could get just what they needed..

I dunno why your PMing me to explain and Copy and Pasted(probably even like your code here) what you said in your post.

I said send me it to analyze if it's not infected. Why try to convince me, let me have it and I'll do analysis and show you proofs it's clean or infected.

He answers in seconds and when I ask for it he stalls, I bet he's trying to make clean version :-). I'll compare the MD5 from what you sent to other members, don't bother. Just close the Fail Thread and I'll be happy. :-)

It is made with Autorun Enterprise, you know when you install a program off of a disc the menu that pops up for installation this is my GUI. And the programs are in a folder which can be taken out and used without the GUI because they are virtualized. Look at how many quality members have downloaded this, someone would have reported this by now if it was not clean.

I will send it to you which version do you want installer or USB edition?

More Proof for the skid:

<http://forum.avira.com/wbb/index.php?page=Thread&threadID=108420>

A Quote from the last link, "This has been discussed on the VMware forums and is presumably related to the fact that the Thinapp executables are compressed and cannot be unpacked by Antivir (and several other antivirus brands) so it flags them as suspicious with some generic trojan."

And this is why different programs will have the same false positives. And the Avast scans for the last tools were done this way because the file size is too big to be uploaded to ANY online virus scanner.

14 more posts and you'll automatically be credible. That's the logic here. Anyone just joining or anywhere under 50 posts obviously isn't here to stay. Didn't you know? The maker of this started out with 100 posts already in his account.

HelloGoodbye - April 30, 2011, 1:46 pm

Most use bruteforce and dictionary attacks, but the systools PDF unlocker uses special methods to remove printing/editing restrictions.

Thanks.

I think someone would have found something by now if it was, lol. Thread is almost a year old. Since your HJT team I sent you both editions, please check them thoroughly. Buzus is a common false positive for ThinApp packaged softwares, some lesser A.V.'s don't have the capability of unpacking the executable to scan it so they label it with a generic detection. And since you say it's infected, hopefully after checking this out you will edit your post to say otherwise, kind of premature to say it's infected before looking at the tool. ?
